showing creative ability
It has been proven many times during the year that University organizations can produce legitimate theatrical productions. The success with which members of the Irving and Kappa literary societies presented "Mrs. Bumpstead-Leigh" on Wednesday is only the latest evidence that histrionic ability is one of the numerous assets of the campus.

The suggestion is made, however, that University organizations should not only play the plays but that they should write them as well. Creative ability as well as histrionic ability is one of the numerous assets of the campus.

The engineers and the law present productions that smack of variety. Their stuff is original, it is clean and it is well staged, and the campus wants to see it continued. The engineers' Moon show and the law's Juhibles are among the few traditions of the campus. But at the same time there is not drama in the real sense.

College students, as a rule, show greater skill at writing one-act plays than they do at writing original ones. The action in these is not set to lag as it is in longer plays. Three one-act plays presented by the University Players next year may be an innovation. Their presentation of courses, of course, is not limited to the Plays. Any campus organization could essay such a task.

To write their own plays would mean that members of the organization would have to be creative as well as histrionic ability. The latter counts a great deal but the former counts more, all things considered. It is a chance for ambitious playwrights and it is a chance for some organization to show really what its worth is in truth.

AN OVERALL AFTERMATH
After a窗户 existence the overall fund has about died and blown away so far as the Iowa campus is concerned. It only remains for the hopeful commentator with a serious eye to the present rather disturbing economic conditions in what his optimism on the idea that the campus may have left a permanent effect upon the undergradu­ate's attitude toward needless expenditure.

A representative of The New York Times recently made a campus of several of the leading merchants and business men of that city and reported an expression from them concerning the general outlook. In the main, these big business heads agreed that the flood was in the true sense of the word, but all of them agreed that it would produce a more sane attitude among patrons of retail prices.

All of them laid a great part of the blame for present high prices at the source of the indiscriminate buyer who insists on having the article of highest price. This, the financiers explain, works in the very heart of a general boosting of all retail prices.

These men are retailers who have nothing to gain by the publication of such material. Their argument runs strongly.

At any rate we say that the first fountain in the late overall epidemic we might look with a forecasting eye upon the $5 steak and the $60 suit and

THE LISTENING POST

You can't very well go a-Maying when it rains.

At dinner Wednesday evening, ref­erence was made to the vaudeville season in those days of prohibition. Four of us on the staff in the statement that the acts produce ennui rather than pleasure and we wondered if something could not be done to save that languishing amusement. Our cry of distress was answered almost be­fore our fund had been dipped. The Expositor that evening, between the acts of Mrs. Bumpstead-Leigh, Eddie Bolac, Murtle Bogue, Andy Robinson and Edward Bryan, presented what we considered the best vaudeville we've seen in so many years.

One of the reasons that impels us to return here next year is to see Aubrey Berneef take part in an amateur play.

A woman reporter takes slight use­age at the manner in which the spe­cial report, "May" when it rains. "A new paper is supposed to set forth the facts in the simplest manner so that everyone can understand them," it says, and then answers, in a perfectly loving manner, at such words as "bubbles," "Texas magnificence" and "squeezes plays." Have the ladies any real cause for complaint? In stories concerning the weddings of the great and the near great, the brides are attired in the most perfect finery, and yet the ac­counted more man cannot tell, by the description, whether it is calico or silk.

When one accepts and executes a luncheon engagement while attired in a flounced shirt, one feels that luncheon really is getting a foothold in this land of the free.

The Post suggests that the athletic hand ask "Babe" Ruth to become a student at Iowa. It is sure that Mr. Ruth needs a little education and it is quite certain that the Vanier half-team could use some of his home runs.

The Student Council will meet at luncheon in the Mad Hatter tea room today at 12 o'clock.
