In the meantime, up to date our room-mate who has failed to get to the firing line, and who is doing the best he can at the front, has not had time returned to civilian status, but has been working in the colleges of the state for five years, and is doing the best he can at the front, has not had time returned to civilian status, but has been working in the colleges of the state for five years, and is doing the best he can.

While there is so much trouble in the world, we must try to do our best to help those who need it. We should not let our differences in politics or religion come between us. We are all human beings, and we should treat each other with respect and consideration. The Government now pays men $4.00 per day to help keep their present positions without training ahead.

If a man's ability is sufficiently trained, he can be almost immediately enrolled in a school or placed in training for a trade with some firm. Men from out of town will be welcomed at the school for training, and we will give them all the help we can. We are trying to help others, and we want to be helped.

The Daily Iowan shares this view. If we are to become powerful in the world, we must be united in our aims and work together for the betterment of our country. The Daily Iowan is a daily newspaper published in Grinnell, Iowa, and is owned and published by the students of Grinnell College. It was founded in 1885 and is the oldest continuously published student newspaper in the United States. The Daily Iowan is a non-profit, student-run publication that is dedicated to providing a platform for student voices and perspectives.

Professor Wickham has had several experiences on these summer expeditions. While in Alaska in 1897 he made an extended trip up the Hickson river on a dislagged side vessel motor which was the only means of navigation at that time. The passengers on board were all Indians with the exception of Professor Wickham and a revenue officer. During the voyage the boys can save the rocks and began to sink rapidly. Professor Wickham who was aboard his boat below was awakened by an Indian squaw who came to warn him of the danger. All the passengers reached shore safely, but the pro-sidered and supplies went down with the. After several days a few supplies were rescued from the shal- low water, but the party was stranded without any means of transporta- tion either up or down the river. One day a group of Indians came up the river in canoes and stopped the signs of the wreck. Professor Wickham persuaded them to take him up the river, and they consented only after he had promised to do his share of the paddling. They left him many miles up the river where they stayed until the Indians came back on their return trip.

Professor Wickham is not interest- ed in books alone, to quote the fact that he has, up to the present time, described 8,156 species of land- ly beetles. He has a hobby for gardening and he has done a great deal of experimenting with different kinds of plants. His garden always contains from thirty-five to forty varieties of vegetables, and he spends many hours among his plants. Professor Wickham graduated from the University since 1891. He has gained the wheel steamer which was the only construction of the high school here and before entering day a group of Indians came up the river, and they consented only after he had promised to do his share of the paddling. They left him many miles up the river where they stayed until the Indians came back on their return trip.

What Is Vacuum?

If the traffic policeman did not hold up his hand and control the automobiles and wagons and people there would be collisions, confusion, and but little progress in any direction. His business is to direct. The physicist who tries to obtain a vacuum that is nearly perfect has a problem somewhat like that of the traffic policeman. Air is composed of molecules—billions and billions of them flying about, in all directions and often colliding. The physicist's pump is designed to make the molecules travel in one direction—out through the exhaust. The molecules are much too small to be seen even with a microscope, but the pump joggs them along and at least starts them in the right direction.

A perfect vacuum would be one in which there is not a single free molecule. For over forty years scientists have been trying to pump and jog and herd more molecules out of vessels. There are still in the best vacuum obtainable more molecules per cubic centimeter than the air people in the world, in other words, about two billion. Whenever a new jogging device is invented, it becomes possible to eject a few million more molecules per cubic centimeter.

The Research Laboratories of the General Electric Company have spent years trying to drive more and more molecules of air from containers. The chief purpose has been to study the effects obtained, as, for example, the boiling away of liquid in a vacuum. This investigation of high vacua has unexpected results. It became possible to make better X-rays tubes—better because the X-rays were controllable, and if the electron tubes work so essentitial in long-range wireless communication more efficient and trust- worthy, and to develop an entirely new type of insulating lamp, which is filled with a gas and which gives more light than any of the older lamps.

The first was a one act play, "The Big Event" written by three law students. The second called the "Great Outdoors" and showed a readable gypsy camp with a number of musicians around a glowing campfire. The minstrel part came in the last act with the scene laid in a real town where the King of Melody Land and his chorus in grand opera costumes entertained at a spiritual jubilee.
