WALKER WHITESIDE FINDS PERSONAL SATISFACTION IN PLAYING CLASSIC ROLES

By Roberteen Kueneman

"Oh, Yes! I think that every successful actor should see the play and study the work of his contemporary," said Walter Whiteside, as he war to a question fairly flung at him as he stepped from his dressing room in the Englert theatre, attired for the street.

"For my work will not permit me to see as many plays as I should like," he continued, half to himself, "But I shall see more when I again have the time and opportunity. You know, I enjoy seeing other actors in their turn."

Mr. Whiteside who has appeared in only classical and standard roles, was impressed by the popular slurs, "They call him a 'novice' in the opera 'Enrime.' "

"How old is your daughter?"

"Let me see," Mr. Whiteside fixed his eyes intently upon the floor. "Recurrent is just seventeen. You see I always have to stop and think," he apologized.

"Yes, Mr. Whiteside tells me in a letter this evening that on the opening night, Reconnue was repeatedly recorded, and when she finally appeared, the entire audience stood and cheered her.

Mr. Whiteside's pure grey hair is the only evidence of his age, which he dislikes is fifty-one years. The actor before the camera. Yet he had no criticism to offer on Old Slimmer's singing of "Enrume."

Mr. Whiteside is married. His wife and daughter, Rosemond, are living in New York City. While in Des Moines he is insured by long distance telephone that his daughter had scored a smashing success, the called it "Enrume" in the opera "Enrime."
