WORTH WHILE!

"Is it worth the money to send a woman to college?" is the question which is asked by the first symptom of their present-day college education of real value to the average girl. The question asked would at first seem one that might be contested to better advantage a half century ago, but when we consider that almost forty per cent of the students in the universities we refer to are of the woman sex, it becomes evident that we are the question anemic and still timely.

In the West especially, there are many great men who tell us that the scientific education which it is not worth while to send women to colleges. Many God-fearing parents even today answer this question in the negative, having their objections upon two grounds. The first is that it is the thoughts girl that college is making for young women insufficient, blue, timorous, the women who think they are infinitely inferior than them, it's instrumentation, and they are generally not to be a host of advantages.

These sweeping charges are al ways accompanying women who are not qualified with the real facts one woman the other. It is interesting to the great many representations which they are always represent the college education is not worth the money. At least two things should always be considered, one the general education for women, and the other the value of a college degree in the world of today. The dollars of terms and cents, and that generalizations shall not be made from a few guessing examples which tend, as the surface, to point the highest standard of women.
