LEAVE YOUR ORDER FOR SUNDAY PAPERS AT WHETSTONE'S OPEN ALL DAY
Many of the men whose names are to be read in history are design engineers; men like Westinghouse, Lamm, Stanley, Hopkinson, Telford, Shullinger. Their inventions have the quality of usefulness, of reliability, of predictability, which is an involved way, perhaps, of saying that they have the primary requisites of all really great inventions: meritoriousness.

Engineering history abounds in instances of inventors who professed no product, or of great developments that never reached completion, and most of these instances are explained by the lack, somewhere in the system, of the ability to give Service. Service, in a machine or a system, or wherever you find it, is not there by accident but because it was indispensable, because it was a feature of the thing, what was required and knew how to provide it.

Much more is required of the designers than facility in calculation and mastery of theory. He must have first hand and thorough familiarity with the part of the machine, and with mechanical and operating conditions. It takes more than mere imagination and an ability to design apparatus that will be really serviceable and will "stand up."

Praps, we could think up a lot-a-nine dollar words to tell you about our home made pies—our sandwiches— Mali the rolls with our break-fast methods. We could tell lots about our coffee, but after all there’s only one best. Anyway—the "regulars" know—that one at your elbow.

There is no knocker—you merely walk in.
