Turkey's Defiant:Hope of Peace Grows Remote

British Must Act Now Against Kemalists or Back Down Completely

By C. A. Lincoln

Congressmen, Sept. 20—The British and Turkish Government faces today a decision on whether it will meet the ultimatum delivered by the Kemalists last week. On the face of it, the State Department and the Kemalists have reached an impasse, both the nations agreeing with the other to demand an armistice and neither agreeing to offer peace terms. The Hull-Roosevelt conference of last November, closing a period of diplomatic effort during which the United States and the British Commonwealth sought to bring the Turkish and Kemalist leaders to a conference, has come to naught. Both nations are now in bed of war, and the question is, whether the Hull-Roosevelt conference was a failure because of the failure of the British and Turkish leaders to come to the understanding, or whether it will be concluded by the exhaustion of the armistice period.
