KILL A FEW PROPS URGES J. A. PATTEN

Tom Moody College Professors and Three Other Men Make Pay Stall

Chicagoans have been urged to kill a few props by J. A. Patten, known as the "Prop Wizard." Mr. Patten, who is a member of the faculty of the Art Institute of Chicago, has been giving lectures on the subject of "Prop Making." He has been urging people to kill a few props in order to make the world a better place.

Mr. Patten believes that props are necessary for the stage and that they are used to create a certain atmosphere. He feels that by killing a few props, the audience will be able to see the actors better and will be able to appreciate the performance more.

The Prop Wizard will be making a series of lectures on the subject of "Prop Making" throughout the country.

Nothing, perhaps, is more obviously unaskable in the higher classes than the showing of one's own individuality behind the cloak of affection and sentiment. The other day one of the sports of home economics was the subject of a bit of a flap. "Don't eat any white bread," the girls were told, "but many other things are equally important. He gave us a sigh to get it off my chest. "I had to," I said, "so I went out and washed it."

MANY WOMEN ENROLLED IN VARIOUS DIFFERENT PROFESSIONAL COLLEGES

Fifty women are enrolled in the professional colleges of the University of Iowa.

New women are enrolled in the professional colleges this fall, as the result of a new movement among the alumni. Twenty-four of the new students are enrolled in the college of dentistry and at least one in each of the other colleges.

In History

The excellent high schools in Iowa, the university, and other institutions of learning, have been instrumental in preparing the young men and women for the professions. The foreman of the dental college, for example, was the son of a farmer who had received a good education in the rural school. The foreman of the medical college, on the other hand, was the son of a physician who had received a good education in the medical college. The foreman of the law college, on the other hand, was the son of a lawyer who had received a good education in the law college.
