English Women Are Battling Each Other In London Shops

London, Jan. 26—(United Press) Christmas being over, the women of London are waging bitter and bloody battle.

Which is another way of saying that after the Christmas sales the big department store have begun, and that Christmas London is determined to get the best and biggest bargains from the salons of fashion.

Five times in London is something to have seen everywhere in the world—on a chaise. When the term used "HALL" is defined in the advertisement space of the newspaper and on the great street boards, in the women of London doing in the window and out, teeth chattered, for battle.

These weeks the sidewalks outside the big stores have been packed from eleven o'clock with a passing, seething ocean of women, rushing to get into the store, squeezing earlier and traffic congestion by walking with those who wish to get in.

Once inside the store, Madame Robinson knows her enemy behind the seen a far goal, delightfully sought, the "street" of women that has the wanted. She makes a song of the battle. She is on the pacing boards. They all grasp it as mine, mark it, turn it over, to pass the time for a world like a pack of sages.

A steady, unbroken stream from the store, throws to uneven, they cannot all have the coat. In the department store, the battle is to be brought up in February, at the strain, tries to reason with the battle of the coat.

In the display departments women rivalry is supreme, cocktails, blouses, and undergarments. It is a war that must be fought to the finish, and underarm gussets is the battle. They will have it, and so the battle.

The four illustrations show how we have provided a coat for every taste—and every price.

Colonel Mumma has been executive officer of the national rifle association for many years. His service was extended when America was at war. Last year they were held in both the United States and England. In order to push the work rifle lessons are being taught in Canada, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Japan, Australia, and various other countries.

Several years ago he published "A Tale of the Blues," and "9 Tales of the Blues Company," both of which have been used in training the members of the National Rifle Association at which he is a life member.

She could hear the hoof-beats of the cowboy's horse in the valley. Once a minute she might hear him come. The heart beat might keep her chilled forever or kill her as he threatened—but her girl heart yearned for the cowboy who was the almost promised groom to save her. Don't miss the thrill of today! Here is a picture you will want to see!

of drug habit: a fight against the uốnging

As a better and public speaker Mr. Walpole has been heard several times in this country. He has made many strong arguments against the use of alcohol.

The Englishman, however, begins to show that the Englishman may be a stronger lecturer as an American lecturer as he is.

Walpole's first novel, "The Wonder Horse," was published in 1830 after he had spent several years in a school house. Since then about a dozen novels have come from his pen at regular intervals.

NOW OPEN

Dear friends in Bloedow, Lavans, especially to big dinner! They all came. Considering how few they believed it was possible to get a real fine $5 lunch for such low prices, they were astounded when they found that they could. In four hours some 200 people came, and the place was crowded. The popularity of our $5 lunch has increased by leaps and bounds, proving beyond any doubt that it is Iowa City's best value.

There are many dining places where by paying top prices you can get the finest food, and there are many dining places where by confining yourself with small clubs of food often indifferent, you can get a good deal of money for a small amount of money. BUT THE DE LUXE IS ONE HAPPY SOLUTION. Here the food is always the best quality obtainable. The portions turned out are ample for men and larger than our expenses are ever likely.
