The idea of germs everywhere—even in your telephone—may be an overstatement, according to Dr. Logan C. Christensen, a bacteriologist at Oregon State University. He says the truth of the matter is that your phone may harbor some germs, but they are not likely to cause any harm. In fact, the germs that can be found on a telephone are usually not harmful, and they are unlikely to cause any medical problems.

Christensen has conducted extensive research on the germs found on public phones.
