WHAT KIND OF PEACE?

By James W. Davis

The problem of world peace is one of the most perplexing that confronts mankind today. It is not only a theoretical problem, but it has practical implications as well. The solution to the problem of world peace is not a simple one, and it requires the cooperation of all nations.

The United Nations, established after World War II, was created with the goal of preventing future wars. However, despite its efforts, conflicts and tensions have continued to exist. The United Nations has had some successes, such as in ending the Korean War and the Cold War, but it has also faced challenges, such as in the ongoing conflict in Syria.

The United Nations is not a perfect organization, and it has its limitations. It is dependent on the cooperation of its member nations, and some nations may have different interests. Despite these limitations, the United Nations remains an important organization in the pursuit of world peace.

The problem of world peace is a complex one, and it requires the involvement of all nations. It is a challenge that we must face together, and it is one that we must work to solve.

Sanitarium Patient Satisfaction Survey

The occupational therapy department of the General Sanitarium has begun a survey of patients who have been treated by the department. The survey is being conducted to determine the patients' satisfaction with the services provided by the department. The survey will be conducted through written questionnaires, which will be distributed to patients. The questionnaires will be returned to the department by patients. The department will then analyze the data collected from the questionnaires to determine the patients' satisfaction with the services provided by the department.

Police Chief Urges Drivers To Exercise Caution Saturday

75,000 Expected In City Saturday

Police Force Enlarged To Handle Increased Traffic For Game

Chief of Police Paul Burns joined forces with the university athletic department this week in urging all persons attending the home football game against Wisconsin this week end, particularly Iowa City residents, to exercise restraint in their driving habits. The police department is urging all motorists to a minimum. Many persons have been killed or injured on their way in and from gridiron sites this year, he said.

Commissioner of Public Safety Robert Gilson is commenting on the need for providing a sufficient number of police officers to maintain a safe and orderly street pattern so as to provide maximum protection to the safety of all persons visiting Iowa City during the coming contest, Chief Burns has said. Iowa City is expected to be visited by approximately 25,000 persons, Mrs. Blanche Hembury, City Journal, has estimated. And the police department is urging everyone to exercise restraint in their driving habits to assist in maintaining the order that will be necessary to protect the safety of all persons visiting Iowa City.
