Make Way for Deflation
Nobody seems to know what has happened to the market in spite of the demonstrated efficacy of economic and political measures as well as confidence for further measures. Washington is all agog to find any possible improvement in a market situation that may be reflecting a fundamental shift in the economic trend.

The New York Times, for instance, blames the recent sales panic on "many interrelated factors." What is really going on, however, is not so much the question of these market reactions as to the even more fundamental question: How can we go on with our present system of wages, prices, and interest rates? The story of wages is, indeed, the most important aspect of the present situation.

Newspaper prices, for example, are now the same as those of a year ago. Interest rates, too, have continued at the same level. On the other hand, wages have been reduced by something about 25 per cent. This is, indeed, a significant fact. For it signifies that the value of money has been reduced by something like the same proportion. This, in turn, is the very essence of deflation. It means that the purchasing power of money has been reduced by something like the same percentage as the reduction of wages.

More than 1,000 supervisors, affiliated with old Henry's "Right-hand men, have been told to reduce their rates to 12, 000, and to eliminate as many workers as possible.

A $15,000,000 post-war expansion program has been halted, and a $10,000,000 engineering and research project in the way. The latter has been suspended because of the reduced purchasing power of money.

The 250,000 employees have been given a letter authorizing them to adjust their wages and prices as they see fit, with a new rate of $1 per hour for all employees.

The wage cut is expected to bring about a reduction of $200,000,000 in the cost of living, or a saving of 25 per cent.

This is the kind of break which would never have been causaed by the present system of wages, prices, and interest rates.

James D. White's Interpreting the News...
The Federal government is the first to admit that its efforts toward controlling inflation have thus far been unsuccessful. It is now prepared to admit that its efforts toward controlling wages have also been unsuccessful. It is now prepared to admit that its efforts toward controlling interest rates have also been unsuccessful. It is now prepared to admit that its efforts toward controlling prices have also been unsuccessful. The Daily Iowan in accordance with the report of the Engineering Board, the framework of the barracks for the new dormitory will be changed from the present design.

The change will also result in a more efficient use of space and will provide better ventilation for the students.
