Election Ahead--What Are the Issues?

What is the significance of this first post-war general election? By Rep. Kirk Porter, of West Branch, a prominent part of the present campaign is the determination of political candidates to be "good" newspaper men.

Liberalism has become an issue, a farcry from the days when "Mr. Martin is a lawyer" was its key phrase. It is far from a "good" newspaper man's business to let the public know about candidates who are determined to be "good."

What is the domestic question in this campaign? By Prof. George Robinson, of Drake University, who is a "good" newspaper man as well as a "good" professor of political science, is convinced that the domestic question in this campaign is between the Democratic and Republican parties. It is the real question that决定了 whether the candidates will be "good" newspaper men.

Out of the war experience of 1914-18, many political parties have been born, the government has been hobbled, and both compulsory labor and compulsory military service have been debated.

Mr. Martin has seen the light of the last war, and he has been determined to make the government of the United States "good." He has been determined to make the government a "good" newspaper man. He has been determined to make the government "good" in the eyes of the people of the United States.

The people that are interested in the political situation are the people who are interested in the "good" newspaper man. They are the people who are interested in the government that is determined to be "good."

The government that is determined to be "good" is the government that is determined to be "good" in the eyes of the people of the United States.
