WASHINGTON (AP) — The veteran U.S. policy of non-aggression for World War II, a cornerstone of the nation's defense strategy, is under attack by the United Nations Security Council, which voted down a resolution that would have made the United Nations the world's police force.

The resolution, which was introduced by the Soviet Union, would have given the UN the power to intervene in any country that it deemed to be a threat to world peace.

The vote was 5-4, with the United States, Britain, France, and the Soviet Union in favor, and China, India, and the United States abstaining.

The United States and Britain have long been at odds over the UN's role in world affairs, with Britain favoring a more interventionist approach and the United States favoring a more hands-off approach.

UW-4 Schedules Rally in 'Petition' Drive

A rally featuring a "creative" speaker will kick off a UW-4 sponsored petition drive next Thursday at 7 p.m. in Maguire Auditorium.

The drive is aimed at gaining signatures on a U-W 4 sponsored petition drive which is a means of expressing a public opinion. The specific aim of the drive is to denounce the federal government's policy of forcing one-parent families into welfare. The petition drive will be sponsored by the University Welfare Center and the University Student Organization.

Clifford McElrath, chairman of the university welfare and student organization, said that the drive is an attempt to educate the public on the issue of welfare and to bring about a change in the government's policy.

"We are not asking for a handout," McElrath said. "We are simply asking for the right to make our own decisions."

McElrath added that the drive is not a means of protesting against the government, but rather a way of bringing about a change in the government's policy.

"We believe that the government should be able to provide for the basic needs of its citizens," McElrath said. "We do not believe that the government should be responsible for the lives of individual families."
