1 Year Since Big Illinois Mine Disaster

WEST FRANKFORD, Ill. (AP) - In the shadow of the West Frankford Mine where a mining disaster killed 14 men on Dec. 8, 1952, 14 years is a long time when you’re down here in the bowels of the earth. It only takes 14 men to go down a coal mine, but it takes 14 men to go down a mine disaster. If you’re looking for the right words to describe the futility of the effort, this is it - ‘14 men went down, 14 men never came back.’

A meeting was held in the mine today to commemorate the anniversary of the disaster. The meeting was called by the families of the victims, who wanted to remind the nation of the toll mining takes on its workers.

“Every year, we come together to remember the sacrifices these men made,” said one of the family members. “We want the world to know that mining is not just about coal, but about the men who work in it.”

The families also called for stricter safety regulations to prevent such disasters from happening again. “We want the government to do more to protect the miners,” said another family member.

The West Frankford Mine was one of the deadliest mining disasters in American history. It occurred on Dec. 8, 1952, when a fire broke out in the mine, causing a rapid and deadly evacuation. Thirteen of the 14 men who died were miners, and one was a supervisor.

The disaster shocked the nation and led to new safety regulations and stricter oversight of mine operations. However, the families of the victims say more needs to be done to prevent similar disasters from happening again.

Killed by Police In Escape Attempt

The French Liner CHAMPOLLION, 164-tons "Queen of the Middle East" for a mainland cargo run, was in a narrow channel of the harbor at New York when a soldier was wounded in an explosion. The blast silenced Christmas Eve in the harbor, said Sgt. James Eugene McDermott, a crew of the ship.

The ship was on its way to New York from France, where it had been on a special mission to bring back French horses. The horses were to be used by the U.S. Army for its own needs.

REVIEW OF THE YEAR—By Alan Mavin

New York—Come the end of the year, the men in the New York Times's sports department will begin to collect data for their annual review of the year in sports. But as we look back over the season, it is hard to believe that it has been only 12 months since the start of the World Series.

The year began with the World Series, which saw the Cincinnati Reds defeat the Boston Red Sox in four games. The series was marred by controversy over the behavior of the Red Sox's Bill Killefer, who was suspended for five games for his role in a pitch-fixing scandal.

As the year progressed, the National Basketball Association (NBA) continued to grow in popularity, with the Chicago Bulls emerging as the dominant team. The Bulls won their fourth straight championship, defeating the Seattle SuperSonics in six games. The mini-series, which was held in Chicago, featured an exciting battle between the two teams. The Bulls' star player, Michael Jordan, recorded 41 points in Game 6.

In football, the New England Patriots continued their dominance in the AFC, winning their second conference championship in three years. The Patriots defeated the Baltimore Ravens in the AFC Championship Game, setting up a matchup with the San Francisco 49ers in the Super Bowl. The 49ers were favored to win, but the Patriots emerged victorious, pulling off a stunning upset with a 49-26 win.

The year also saw the rise of the women's professional soccer league, with the United States Women's National Team qualifying for the World Cup. The team's victory in the tournament earned them the right to compete in the Olympic Games.

On the track, the year was marked by the achievements of American athletes, particularly in the track and field events. The United States' women's team won the gold medal in the 4x400 meter relay, while the men's team took silver in the 4x100 meter relay.

As we look forward to the new year, we are excited for what the future holds in the world of sports. With the promise of new challenges and opportunities, the year ahead is sure to be filled with exciting moments and unforgettable memories.

For more on the world of sports, be sure to check out the New York Times's sports section, which provides comprehensive coverage of the biggest events and the latest news and analysis.
