Some American GI's who had once chosen the comfortable life in France and Red China sailed for the United States Monday night. These three were gratefully returning to the land of opportunity and the right to keep their word. What will happen to these men when they reach home? How will they be treated by their fellow man? What should America do with them?

It is undeniable that some among us would claim that these men have seen the way of their own and have been sufficiently punished by the thought of being thrown out of country. Perhaps it is the right thing that should be done.

But if any consistency is to be followed, the United States should be more consistent in enforcing P.O.W.'s, our own men, with clear conscience; permit that to happen.

For our action toward our own military personnel is clearly contradictory. Ratherkeller and Davis' were convicted of the crime of cooperating with the enemy, and operating with, or under the color of the reds. They acted as aids and directed us and for this crime the two corporals drew long terms in jail.

There are the always triumphant return of Capt. Harold Pond and our own in the guise of repatriation. These young officers casually admitted "brainwashing" while they were in the army. These men joined the army while still in their teens. This is the group on their way back.
