Cold Water Thrown
On Nuclear Test Ban

NEW YORK (AP) — The Soviet Union Monday exploded a proposal for a ban on nuclear tests in the atmosphere to end the three-month clash with Britain and France over testing.

A new phase in the nuclear weapons standoff was opened Monday, and a new era of confrontation was announced.

The Soviet proposal was rejected by the United States and Britain, which said it was "generally anticipated" that the testing would end.

The Soviet announcement was not immediately endorsed by either Britain or France, and it is not clear whether the testing will end.

The Soviet proposal was made public Monday morning, just as the United States was preparing to test a new nuclear weapon.

The Soviet proposal was not immediately endorsed by Britain or France, which said it was "generally anticipated" that the testing would end.

Freedom for What?

The outcry from the harshest necessity is charging the Kennedy administration with an anti-Beatles policy. This was unexpectedly refuted recently when a settlement was announced in the government’s case against the General Electric Company for illegal price fixing.

This case involved collusion among a number of electrical apparatus manufacturers in quoting prices for power producing generators and turbines.

Several G. E. officials received 20-year sentences for their roles in the conspiracy. The Justice Department and the company have both claimed a willingness to settle the case. But the agreement was not the only achievement of the settlement: it was a victory for the anti-Trust Division over the shadow of an impending reorganization of the firm.

The Justice Department is to be praised for the hard work that has gone into the preparation of this case. It is to be hoped that the courts will be willing to impose the penalties that are necessary to ensure the future of competition in a field where the public interest would be harmed by the monopoly of a single producer.

Fall’s Elections Will Give Many Answers

by ROBERT W. DONOHUE

The spectacle of presidential candidate Adlai E. Stevenson II for the Democratic nomination, and Governor Richard Daley of Illinois for the Republican nomination, is a reminder that the Illinois presidential primary is the only primary in the country where the two major parties have candidates for their own nominations.

This primary is important because the winner will likely determine the Democratic candidate for governor. The primary is held on March 8, and the general election is held on November 8.
