Indian Says Reds ‘Came in 1,000’s’

By CONRAD PUNK

TEHRAN, Iran—"They came in thousands. They..." said a high-ranking Indian officer, who asked not to be identified, referring to events in 1930. The Indian officer, who said he was a close friend of the oil-rich Iranian government, confirmed reports that a large number of Chinese soldiers had entered Iran recently. He said the Chinese were seeking to establish new trade routes through Iran.

He described the Chinese as "hard-working" and said they had "a lot of money to spend." He added that the Chinese had been doing business with Iranian merchants for many years.

The officer said he had met several Chinese businessmen who were interested in investing in Iran. He said the Chinese were interested in establishing new trade routes and in developing new markets for their goods.

He also said that the Chinese were interested in investing in the oil industry. He said the Chinese were interested in establishing new oil fields and in developing new oil reserves.

The Omnipotent D-Slip

Since the first celebration of Thanksgiving (1863) and the founding of the first American college, Howard (1880), it would be fallacious, as well as uncritical, to say that the scheduling of classes has been fundamentally manipulated to coincide with the students' desire to get home and explain impending holidays, telling of poor academic performance.

Admittedly, we cannot even tell if students in those days attended classes. But it is of interest nonetheless that as far as we could determine, D's were invented.

However, Dalglish, Farley, and similar harbinger of academic failure are painfully present among us today, and it is a fortunate occasion that most academic students have a chance to get home and smooth things over before the end of their semesters.

If D's are issued before Thanksgiving (this year they weren't), they usually break up major and speed things up to bring the grading student home and then the pathetic confrontation is particularly helpful in explaining the current. But many others who have broken from one year to the next remain in Iowa City and await the letters from parents bringing them costly mail to Maman dums of retuming financial support.

Since Dalglish supplies an accessible opportunity to parents not acquainted with the University, and may not all students can explain their troubles in person, we feel some D's need understanding.

In most cases the messages are accurate and tell the complete story. One student I met Editor this fall is doing above average work. Usually the midterm evaluation is lacking. By enough examinations and other projects to determine whether a student is performing up to the best for his letter to a minority of students, labeling under the specific dictates of a minority of selected lower-division students, it is wiser.

Some of the Dalglish's issued each semester could tell the entire story something like this: Following these pop quizzes and original short story, finding about a third cost of your final grades, make a conscious effort to increase your grades and give your professors the chance to raise your grades. But such is inexact, personal Dalglish is impossible because the scheduling of classes has been fundamentally manipulated to coincide with the students' desire to get home and explain impending holidays, telling of poor academic performance.

Before dismissing the painful subject, until next April at least, we offer the chance to the recipients of D's. This instructor may not have given the modern test in time, and you should not be measured on the measure of your performance, but rest assured he will prepare the final exams on time. -Jerry Ellison

A baseball writer named Smith agreed in New York Thursday to return to one All-Star game a season.

The return to one game came, remarkably, since the World Series, was a matter of negotiation when the American Assn. and National League agreed that in the future the players’ pension fund will receive $10 a game. The change will take effect January 1.

Bill REILIHAN

Bill Reilihan brings over six years of valuable experience working with books to Iowa Book and Supply Co. Bill, who hails from Burlington, worked in a book store there during his high school days. He has been working with Iowa Book for two years.

Bill, a sophomore in the College of Liberal Arts, handles the core book section in the book department of Iowa Book and Supply. During the Christmas season, he is also doubling as a floor worker aiding in selecting gifts from the large selection available at Iowa Book.

I think they are the best series out." Also available at Iowa Book is the COLLEGE OUTLINE SERIES which has long been a favored study aid for college students.

Iowa Book and Supply Company has 4,000 square feet of space in its book department. An estimated 20,000 titles fill the shelves with around 100 title changes every week. Students interested in special gifts for others might find an array of gift ideas at Iowa Book.

Inventor of a new kind of refrigerator door, which will be unveiled in a few weeks, said the door would be on display in a few weeks. The inventor, who has been working on the project for several months, said he was confident it would be ready to go on sale within a month. The door is designed to conserve energy and is expected to be more efficient than existing models.

Richard Ober, 25, of Through, Minn., stood up at the Coordinate to speak about the door and how it works. The display, which is being held as an event to celebrate the inventor's work, was attended by a large crowd.

Ober said he has been working on the door for several months and has spent a significant amount of money on the project. He said he hopes the door will be commercially viable and that he will be able to make a profit from its sale.

"I've been working on this for a long time," Ober said. "I'm excited to see it finally come to life."

The door is made of special materials that Ober said are designed to keep the refrigerator cool for longer periods of time. He said he believes the door will be able to reduce energy consumption by up to 50% compared to existing models.

Ober plans to launch a Kickstarter campaign to raise funds for the production of the door. He said he hopes to raise $50,000 in the next few months to cover the costs of production.

"I've already invested a lot of money in this project," Ober said. "I'm excited to see where it goes from here."
