Deaths over 100 As Small-Town—Details Reported

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The event of death and tragedy caused by Alaska's earthquake disaster passed over the nation much more swiftly than it ever would have if it had struck a city. Of the nation's five major cities, Anchorage, Alaska, has been hardest hit by the event.

At least 100 died in the city, including its mayor, Robert L. Young, and his wife, Mary. At least 30 more were reported missing. In all, about 200 people were reported missing in the city, which has a population of 200,000.

A proposed amendment to the state Constitution would limit the number of days the legislature could meet in special or what is called a "virtual" session. The amendment is being heard in the Special Joint Committee on constitution and constitutional law.

Wednesday, J. Lawrence, 61, 2111 Murray, Ashby, was driving east on this rural road when a large object fell from the sky and hit his car, January 19, 1960. A proposed amendment to the state Constitution would limit the number of days the legislature could meet in special or what is called a "virtual" session. The amendment is being heard in the Special Joint Committee on constitution and constitutional law.

The amendment, sponsored by Sen. Robert J. O'Donnell, D-Ky., would require a two-thirds vote of the Senate and House of Representatives to call a special session. The amendment would also limit the number of special sessions to four per year.

The amendment was reported favorably by the committee, which also recommended that the measure be referred to the Senate floor for further consideration.

But the measure now has a better chance of passing in both chambers, according to committee Chairman Sen. Stephen B. Davis, D-Va.

"I believe the amendment has a good chance of passing," Davis said. "We have had a lot of good support for the measure, and I think it will be voted on favorably by both the Senate and House."

Housing condition law faces new local test

HOUSING HISTORY may be made in Iowa City today. A hearing which could have permanent echoes on housing standards will convene at 3:30 this afternoon before Johnson County District Court.

The case involves a dispute between an Iowa City landlord and four University students who over her $300 in back rent. The students, three of whom have won the right not to pay the rent because they wish to test the strength of Iowa law in the housing field.

According to Iowa law, rent must not legally be collected by a landlord operating a deficiency which does not meet certain standards. The law also states that no legal action may be taken by such a landlord against his tenants unless he can prove that the building, or a portion thereof, was in a condition, or more of the building condition.

But in a M.L.T. (M канал, otherwise mentioned as illiterate and incapable of making himself heard by the court, not by all, on the basis of the tenant's view that the building was not in a condition, or more of the tenant condition.

The fight against the M.L.T. laws, however, means a chance to improve the conditions of present and future tenants of the area. The case entered in 1959, a mere six years ago, would be equal.

Education: narrowing the cultural gap

By RALPH GILLO

Washington, March 19—There was a time when the word school and the word university were a synonym for the word training. Now that same word school and university mean a synonym for the word preparation. These two words are the same in the same meaning. And it is in this meaning that we find the schools of today, and the schools of tomorrow.

But what are the schools of to-day? What are the schools of tomorrow? What do they mean to the students of to-day? What do they mean to the students of tomorrow? What do they mean to the students of every age?

The schools of today are those in which the education is not only a training for life, but a preparation for life. They are those in which the student is not only taught to think, but taught to think for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to read, but taught to read for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to write, but taught to write for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to speak, but taught to speak for himself.

The schools of tomorrow are those in which the education is not only a training for life, but a preparation for life. They are those in which the student is not only taught to think, but taught to think for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to read, but taught to read for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to write, but taught to write for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to speak, but taught to speak for himself.

The schools of every age are those in which the education is not only a training for life, but a preparation for life. They are those in which the student is not only taught to think, but taught to think for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to read, but taught to read for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to write, but taught to write for himself. They are those in which the student is not only taught to speak, but taught to speak for himself.
