Iowa to lose Boyd? Ul president defends his top candidate for Ohio State post

By JERRY DEPPE

A proposal for the number of teaching assistant (TA) funds at Iowa State University is being reviewed by the faculty Senate TA Review Committee in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. The proposal was presented to the college's faculty Senate by President Dr. Bruce R. Roderick, who also introduced Dr. Ron L. Kaufman as the college's new director for student services.

Kaufman was identified through an intense search for someone who could bring a new vision to the college, Roderick said. Kaufman has been a faculty member at several universities, including the University of Wisconsin at Madison, and has served as a dean at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Boyd resigns

The job of a top leader at Iowa University is being done by a man who is considered to be a powerful "political" or "policy" maker. William R. Faust, assistant professor of political science, was appointed to the position by Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. He succeeded President Charles L. L. L. L. L. McAllister, who died suddenly last month.

Boyd's resignation comes as a surprise to many faculty members, who were concerned about his tenure as president. However, Faust's appointment was widely supported, with many faculty members expressing their confidence in his abilities to lead the university.

Wednesday, Brian Johnson were an article attacking Richard Herrnstein (then| of the University of Chicago) and his ideas. In the context of the ongoing debate on intelligence and social equality, the article serves as a point of contention. Herrnstein's work, particularly his book The Bell Curve, has been criticized for its implications on social and economic disparities. The article argues that Herrnstein's views are overblown and that the debate around intelligence and its role in shaping society is not as straightforward as his proponents suggest. The author points out the complexities and ethical considerations involved in the discussion, urging for a more nuanced and respectful dialogue.

unfortunately, for 30. Johnson, Herrnstein, and Johnson are not, at least, in agreement. The overlook of Johnson's argument seems to point out the broader implications of Herrnstein's work. Herrnstein's theories on intelligence and its contributions to social stratification have been widely debated, with some advocating for its validity and others critiquing its limitations.

Thanks Constable questioner

To the Editor: Thanks to Karl Schrader for taking the time to negotiate my way into the literary efforts in writing "Constable's Perspective." He enjoys my reviews of the constable and the philosophy of literature. I have noticed a trend in the way my reviews are presented to me. It seems that the tone of the reviews has changed over time. In the past, my reviews were more critical and focused on the ideas presented. However, in recent reviews, I have noticed a shift toward more positive commentary, particularly in the way Herrnstein's ideas are presented. This trend has made me wonder whether the reviewer's perspective has changed over time. It seems that the focus has shifted from a critical examination of Herrnstein's ideas to a more supportive and affirming tone. While I appreciate the positive feedback, I wonder if the reviewer's perspective is truly reflective of the ideas presented. It seems that the reviewer may be influenced by their own biases or preconceptions, which could affect the overall tone of the review. I hope that the reviewer will continue to provide critical and nuanced commentary, allowing for a more balanced and thoughtful examination of the ideas presented.

We as individuals can change our lives and hence the world. It's not that we can change the world, but it's that we can influence it. We can change our lives and have an impact on the world around us. It's important to recognize the power we have and use it for good. In times of crisis, we can come together and work towards a common goal. It's up to us to make a difference and leave a legacy. — Richard Bartel

The Daily Iowan

The Daily Iowan

Dear Fellow Americans,

Remember when they first described us as a nation of free people, the first time, candidates of both parties were running for president and talked of the need for order, respect, and national unity? It sounds like that was some time ago.

Well, almost everyone has had their fill of that. The last time we got into a little debate over who was the greatest politician and how we could fix our problems was in the early 1990s. I remember.

If you ask anyone, they'll tell you that the last time they were interested in the presidential campaign was in the early 1990s.

That's why I'm becoming the most popular candidate I've ever had ever. And that's why it's a pathetic insult to the most powerful man in this country, right? Because he's not the one who's going to win, let's hear what all the other candidates are saying. We should not be defending Herrnstein's article. This defense of Herrnstein will not be the last time that Herrnstein can win. Because, if we're going to defend Herrnstein, then we're going to have to admit that there's a whole lot more at play here than just his right.

So Herrnstein has put out this new essay. "Why We Should Not Defend Herrnstein's Article." This is a very important essay. It's not just about defending Herrnstein, it's about defending the concept of meritocracy. It's about defending the idea that we should be able to judge people based on their abilities and achievements, and not just on their race or gender.

Herrnstein's original essay was published in The Wall Street Journal. It was a response to a column by the economist and political scientist, Daniel Yergin. Yergin had written about the importance of meritocracy in society, and Herrnstein disagreed. He argued that meritocracy is a flawed concept, and that it is not possible to judge people based on their abilities and achievements.

Herrnstein's essay was widely criticized, and it was seen as a blow to the meritocracy movement. But Herrnstein's essay also sparked a debate about the concept of meritocracy, and it led to a reappraisal of the idea.

I Oldis says Cox to be top notch

The University of Iowa freshman outfielder Jim Cox has been named top-notch by Ollis, the Hawks' coach. "Cox has had a great spring training. The year 1982 will be his year," Cox said. "He has a strong arm, good speed, and good instincts. He has the potential to be a very good major league outfielder." Cox, who led the Hawks in batting last year, has been working on his hitting and fielding during the off-season. He has been taking batting practice three times a week and has been hitting the ball well. Cox is expected to be a key member of the Hawks' lineup in 1982.

J.C. Super Star

Lack of interest was cited for the PBS film 'J.C. Super Star,' which is now off the schedule. The program was scheduled to air on PBS on Saturday, March 31, but has been nixed due to lack of interest. The film was intended to showcase the life and work of Jesus Christ through a modern lens, but the lack of public interest has led to its cancellation. The decision was made by the producers in consultation with PBS officials.
