Revolt moves indoors

Center East houses 'social change' organizations

Four years ago, when hundreds of students occupied the penthouse for mass demonstrations in Iowa City, officials stood clinging to a back pillar of Old Capitol. It seemed at one time passing "trick." You never did it, it would happen like this.

That era has faded and the revolution has moved indoors — part, inside of Center East.

Center East, or the Catholic Student Center located at the corner of Clinton and Jefferson Streets, provides rest-and-office space to three representative groups of the new revolution — Iowa Student Public Interest Research Group (ISPPIRG) and Center for Peace and Justice.

The building also contains three more facilities by Action Studios group and dance classes for Center for Peace and Justice.

Beginning in May, Penney's International (IP) will return a revolving exhibit of prisoner art on display in the building.

Members of the three "social change" organizations agree that past demonstrations did have a great effect on social change and that the focus of their activities has changed.

"We are not promoting in favor of buildings, but getting inside," said Valerie Hinds, ISPPIRG member.

Explaining how ISPPIRG participated in achieving goals, the group, which are working within the system that is the whole difference.

ISPPIRG's thrust of activity is influencing congressmen through lecture series and writing letters, said Larry Schumacher, ISPPIRG member.

Frank Leone, board member for the Center for Peace and Justice, added that mass demonstration has been replaced by "normal" groups working in a laborious and organizing for action.

"I think the demonstrations had some impact, but not much came out of one-day spring games."

"Talking and remaining influential to governmental persons were very effective," Leone added that demonstrations are necessary from time to time to show public opinion.

The Center for Peace and Justice will hold some demonstrations this fall and spring. According to Leone, they are working to make the public more aware of amnesty and war issues by trying to gain more complete press coverage.

David Goodwin, CEA board member, said demonstrations were an attempt to discover how to effect political change.

"The following and soothing for the Center for Peace and Justice, doesn't really get at the problem. As long as politicians decide issues, the political process is where the best changes are for getting change," he said.

The three groups work together to support each other's goals.

ISPPIRG and CEA are attempting to influence the construction of nuclear power plants in and around Iowa, hoping to start an Iowa City recycling center. The group also wants to continue returning deposits for all bottles and cans.

The Center for Peace and Justice and ISPPIRG will work with ISPPIRG to stop bombing of Laos and Cambodia.

Also, ISPPIRG will start a news information service to send to Washington and other groups that can resolve problems, said Robert Bruce.

Inside Watergate—
"Nixon didn't know!"

WASHINGTON—The astonishing story can now be told about the Watergate break-in that nobody ever wanted to write about. The day of the break-in, May 20, 1972, is one that many Americans would rather forget. The story is so astonishing that it has remained classified to this day.

The night of the break-in, a group of five men broke into the Democratic National Committee headquarters at the Watergate Complex in Washington, D.C. They were later identified as members of the Committee to Re-Elect the President, the Nixon administration's shadow organization.

The break-in was the beginning of a series of events that would lead to the Watergate scandal, the resignation of President Richard Nixon, and the conviction of several of his associates.

The story is told in the book "The Eight," by Jack Anderson. The author, who is known for his investigative journalism, has written extensively about the Watergate scandal and its aftermath.

Liddy sees Kleindienst

Liddy outlined Kleindienst of the Committee and the ultimate goal was to assign a private detective to the Watergate Committee.

No written report

Dean was instructed by the President to find out whether any White House people were involved in the Watergate crimes. Contrary to the impression given out by the White House, Dean never asked for, or received, a written report.

The sources were found to need no further protection and they were returned to the Justice Department.

Liddy's mark

Source E snapped and received instructions from someone inside the White House and triggered the astonishing story. This source was Magruder, who was directed Liddy to report at once to the Justice Department.

Liddy's code name

Magruder told how the Watergate wiretappers, known as "Gemstone," were to be destroyed from a pay phone.

Colson and Dean

After the arrest of the Watergate ringleader G. Gordon Liddy, the investigation continued. Magruder was instructed by the Justice Department to report on the Watergate wiretappers.

Ginsberg's investigation

A few presidential advisers, including Dean, were sent to investigate the Watergate wiretappers. The investigation was headed by the Nixon campaign security chief, Charles Colson.

Charlie keeps on fiddlin'

By JOE PODELIS
Staff Writer

Charlie Drellinger made music and left a lasting legacy in the Hawkeye State. His legacy continues to this day as fiddle music thrives in Iowa's communities.

Charlie's star shone bright in the Hawkeye State. Known as the "Fiddlin' Devil" or "Fiddlin' Charlie," he spread joy through his music and让更多...

Charlie grew up in a musical household. His father taught him the fiddle at a young age, instilling in him a love for the instrument. He went on to play at dances and on radio shows. Eventually, he opened his own store, "Charlie's Fiddle Shop," and sold fiddles and related merchandise.

Charlie's music was more than just entertainment; it was a way of life. He played whenever and wherever he could, from small town cafes to large venues.

Charlie's legacy includes the Iowa Fiddling Festival, an annual event that celebrates the state's rich musical heritage. The festival attracts fiddlers from across the country and features competitions, workshops, and concerts.

Charlie Drellinger's influence on fiddle music in Iowa cannot be overstated. His dedication to the craft and his passion for sharing it with others have left a lasting impact on the state's musical landscape.

The story of Charlie Drellinger and his lasting legacy serves as a reminder of the power of music to bring people together and create lasting memories.

Grand jury indictments illegal

The 119th session of the Iowa County Board of Supervisors began its work with the establishment of a new grand jury. The grand jury is a body of 12 citizens who are selected by the judge presiding over the district court. The jury's duty is to investigate and report on any matters that are referred to it by the court.

The board of supervisors is made up of three members, each elected to a four-year term. The board meets once a month to discuss various issues and make decisions for the county.

The board has decided to begin the investigations by looking into the county's financial records. The board has received a number of complaints from citizens regarding alleged improprieties in the county's budgeting practices. The board is committed to ensuring that the county's financial affairs are conducted in an honest and transparent manner.

Grand jury investigations local lawyer

A Jackson County grand jury has been investigating local lawyer Jack C. White. The investigation is centered on allegations of unethical behavior.

The grand jury has been brought in by the Iowa Board of Bar Commissioners, which regulates the practice of law in the state. The board has received complaints from several clients who claim that White has engaged in unethical practices.

The investigation has been going on for several months and is expected to continue for another few weeks. The board is committed to ensuring that the legal community is held accountable for its actions.

Nixon orders increase in cheese imports

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) - President Nixon Wednesday signed an order to increase imports of cheese into the U.S. by 25 percent during the next three months.

The purpose of the action is to restrain rising cheese prices in the United States which have increased as much as 10 percent in the last six months, the government said.

Cheese imports are expected to cover 6.5 percent of domestic cheese consumption.

The normal annual import quota is 325 million pounds, which will rise to 415 million pounds for this year.

The additional 65 million pounds results from Nixon's order. U.S. markets in the next three months, the government said, is expected to increase imports from other sources.
