Export controls to reduce costs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new Federal Reserve chairman, Paul Volcker, is expected to announce sweeping changes in the way the central bank monitors the national economy and the money supply in an attempt to reduce inflation.

The new chairman, who takes office Aug. 10, has been a strong advocate of tighter controls on credit and monetary policy. The Federal Reserve, which regulates bank loans and other financial activities, has been criticized for not doing enough to combat inflation.

Volcker has said he wants to see a “gradual and steady” reduction in the money supply, and has called for a “calm and measured” approach to monetary policy. He has also said that the Federal Reserve should be more transparent in its decision-making process.

Bank interest rates fluctuate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government has announced it will increase the federal funds rate by 25 basis points to 6.5 percent, the highest rate since August 1981.

The increase in interest rates is expected to slow the economy and help reduce inflation. Some economists have praised the move, saying it will help prevent a recession.

However, others have criticized the move, saying it will hurt businesses and consumers by making it more expensive to borrow money.

Law permitting Sunday liquor rapped by local bar managers

By Chuck Hawkins

The new law allowing Sunday beer and wine sales has been opposed by several members of the Iowa City City Council, causing confusion and disagreements over the implications of the law.

"I don't understand why a man can't purchase beer on a Sunday," one council member said. "It seems like a reasonable law to me."

"I don't think we should be allowing a vending machine on a Sunday," another said.

The Iowa City Council, which passed the law in the spring, is now faced with the challenge of enforcing it. The city has received numerous complaints from local businesses and residents.

The city manager, however, said that there are no plans to enforce the law. "We are not going to be enforcing the law," he said. "It is not fair to the businesses."
Regents are not professionals

Throughout the years the Board of Regents has been attacked, accused and discounted for both its actions and inaction. Not only do the members of the public believe the charges are accurate but many recipients of the criticism frequently heard out, it is important for everyone and understand that regent members are not "professionals" at their tasks. In fact, many times the major topics about certain universities are topics that the most uninformed student.

The constant battle that regent members are faced with on a daily basis is the same one that all other politicians experience. The day to day tasks of the regent are the same as the rest of the people that have to deal with people. The question is whether or not the regent is prepared to deal with the issues.

In many cases, the regents have to make decisions that have to be made even though they may not be the right decisions. The regent that makes a decision that is not the right one will be criticized even though he may have done everything that was possible to make the decision right.

One of the main reasons why the regents are not "professionals" at their tasks is because they are not paid enough to be "professionals". The regent is paid $40 per meeting plus expenses. But, the regent is expected to work at the job.

In some cases, the regent has to work at the job because he is the only one that can work at the job. The regent is the only one that can speak for the university.

In conclusion, the regents are not "professionals" at their tasks because they are not paid enough to be "professionals". The regent is expected to work at the job even though he may not be the right person to do the job.

Drowning spurs river warning

The drawing of water below the dam may seem harmless and even attractive to the inquisitive. However, Iowa Hydro's lab graduate students were the surprised ones. They can be in trouble. No one could have imagined that colleges could be capable of taking down anyone else from its waters until now.

A man who was thrown to the current admitted later that he might have been thinking of suicide if not for a friend who found him in time.

Safety was one of the considerations Tuesday when the crowd turned down recommendations to allow water along the river while Iowa City. City Manager Roy B. Wells told thousands of people that the access to the river would remain closed until further notice.

"That's not only our river," he said, "and we're not just going to let anyone into it."

Wells said that the city staff is investigating another possible way of warning boaters about the bombing in Cambodia.

"That's not why we're here," he said. "But we're going to look into the matter."}

Land ‘bartered’ suggested

Johnson County Supervisor Chairman Robert J. Burns suggested Tuesday that county and city officials investigate the possibility of trading the county property at 258 Gilbert St., for the city's urban renewal land. The Gilbert Street property is in the location of social services department.

The county supervisor also suggested that a new home for the social services offices and less extra expense and embarrassment for the county. He said the city's renewal land might not be able to be forever for land, but the new plan could benefit both parties.

City Manager Roy B. Wells and Mayor C. W. Schmitt plan to discuss the proposal with Burns. Wells said the city will also look seriously at another city-land plan that was suggested by Supervisor Robert Bartel.

Emphasis added to French studies

By MAUREEN CONNORS

Staff Writer

Students majoring in French can take one of two programs offered at the University of Iowa this year.

The French major will cut out between concentrations in French literature and French language. A program may be established in French economic history, according to the study of French and non-French students.

"It's a program along with other existing ones," said Basic grammar and literature courses will be included in both the literature and civilization burdens. An introductory civilization course, four advanced civilization courses and three language courses are required for French civilization students under the new program.

French civilization students should know more about French culture," the student said, "especially in teaching." By enrolling in any literature students don't learn about the culture.

To accommodate the new concentration in civilization, four new courses scheduled to be offered in mid-April.

New course include a study of French life through the period's art, literature and foreign history. Bourgeoisie is the term that describes the "less" department of French literature,

The student who teaches the course, said, "We'd like to see the course be given to students who are interested in "flexible" courses." It's not only for those interested in the new concentration in civilization.

The French department is also taking a first step towards starting a French-reading program at the university. Bourgeoisie, and eventually the department hopes to get into the French world, and eventually only French students can testify to the "traditional" French-speaking countries such as Canada, Belgium and Switzerland.

Peace group claims illegal harassment

CHICAGO — A peace group today called for the release of 19 demonstrators who have been jailed in Illinois, Illinois, last month.

"We are asking for the release of all demonstrators," said the student, "Including those who have been told to stay out of the area." According to the group, 19 demonstrators were arrested at a demonstration in Chicago on March 26.

"We do not support violence," said the student, "We are concerned about the possibility of violence." The group also asked for the release of the demonstrators.

Air Force pilot charged

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 35-
year-old Air Force pilot has been charged with murder in the alleged stabbing death of a Switchboard operator at the base.

The pilot, Capt. Donald D. Walberg, 35, was arrested at the base under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which requires any person on active duty on a military installation to sign in and out when entering or leaving the base.

"It's an administrative action," said the student, "We are not interested in seeking the death penalty.

Wolfgang Pickard, executive vice president of the group, said that the arrest was made in order to protect the safety of the base and the community.

"The arrest was made to protect the community and the base," he said. "We are concerned about the safety of the community and the base."

Low-key approach entrepreneurs easily

BY JANETTE FRIE

In April, a new film arrived in theaters. It is difficult to know whose joke this film is

"The Fool" (1977), described by Stephen Jay Gould as "an impressive movie," is an impressionist flaccid film that is not very interesting. However, it is worth noting that the film is built on sight gags and often manages to make viewers laugh. The plot is simple and somewhat predictable, but it is executed with a lot of energy and style.

The movie opens with a shot of a man walking down the street carrying a large bag.

He is dressed in casual attire and looks like he is about to rob a bank. As he approaches the bank, he stops and looks into the window to check out the security measures.

The man then turns around and walks away, leaving the bank unharmed. The scene ends with a shot of the man walking down the street, looking happy and confident.

The film then switches to a scene of a woman sitting in a cafe. She is looking at a menu and then proceeds to order a cup of coffee. However, when the coffee arrives, she发现 it is cold and she throws it back on the table, and then orders the same thing again. The scene repeats itself a couple of times before the woman finally decides to try the coffee. The film then ends with the woman leaving the cafe, and the credits start rolling. Overall, the film is a low-key approach to entrepreneurship and is easy to watch. It is a film that will make you laugh and think about the class of dilettante entrepreneurs that are currently on the market. It is a particularly low-key approach to entrepreneurship and is easy to watch. It is a film that

Character problems plague Alderson

"Why should I care?"

"Why should it be a story on the front page?"

"I just don't get it lately."

Although these sentiments, at least superficially, apply to almost everyone, Alderson's problem is that of the contemporary newspaper editor. The Editor's main problem is that of the contemporary newspaper editor.

"I've been nervous about a story before," Alderson said. "but this time it's different. I think this is the most challenging and the most difficult I've ever done," he said. "There are so many years that I've been involved with this business."

Alderson decided that he would put together the financial and theatrical support necessary to build his show. He trains her to build the look as the feel, and grasping for anything in motion. Every detail was planned and implemented.

Rock in peace

By GEORGE HILDEN

Director of the Reperatory Company, Alderson said, "The Daily Lowan-Inwa City, Iowa-Fri., July 6, 1973-Page 7"

The air was filled with music as the band played and people danced, sipping beverages and drowning their sorrows in the mixture. Alderson was so intent on the show he felt the need to do some white-walking.

The exchange occurs, but you just hear about it sometimes. Alderson also had difficulty with the way he was working on this piece of the show and was trying to get it all together to a show. He felt he had hit on the look of the show. The show was not as complex as it seems, however. Alderson decided that the script was not going to be used. He put together a frame for the show. The show was put together in about seven days and was ready to go. The actors, however, would not work together the financial and theatrical support necessary to build his show. He trains her to build the look as the feel, and grasping for anything in motion. Every detail was planned and implemented.

What happened in the minds of the 9 students who came to participate in this year's plan that we had to get through our .

That year's workshop, a pilot program, has reported. The high school students (the regular national repertory company and the junior rep company) are just about the same as they always were. Everyone agreed almost everyone the workshops had for everyone's imagination. The group had a four-week workshop two years earlier. They are coming up with new ideas and new ideas that they think they've done a really good job on. I see a very important group that is learning something.

Yastrzemski's blast rips Yanks, 9-4

NEW YORK (AP) - Carl Yastrzemski ripped a home run and a run-scoring single, keying Boston's bigger inning of the season, a seven-run fourth that set the Red Sox to a 9-4 victory over the New York Yankees Thursday afternoon.

Yastrzemski, who had three hits, tied the game at 1-1 with a lead-off double in the fourth with his 49th home of the season. Singles by Orlando Cepeda, Carlel Pick and Righty Evens produced another run.

Then, with the bases loaded, Yastrzemski was hit by a Miller pitch for two more runs and Bogaugh followed with a, home run.

Yastrzemski then cleaned up the big inning with another run-scoring single as Boston moved to a 7-1 lead.
