Pueblo's memories live on

By BILL HIBBARD

As he looked out of place, he stood on the edge of the crowd at the Coliseum. It was the last night of the Democratic National Convention, and he could hear the roar of the thousands of delegates packed into the arena. He wore a suit and tie, the only one in the crowd. He was a man of few words, but his presence spoke volumes.

"For those of you who have never been here before, let me tell you something," he said. "This is the place where we decided the fate of a nation."

He was referring to the 1948 Convention, which had been held in Pueblo. It was a pivotal moment in American history, and his connection to the event was personal.

He was a delegate for the Pueblo County Democratic Club, and he had been chosen to deliver the keynote address. He had given a speech that was widely hailed as one of the most influential in the history of the party.

"We have come here tonight to decide the future of our country," he had said. "We have come to decide whether we will continue to be a nation of the people, by the people, for the people, or whether we will become a nation of the rich, by the rich, for the rich."

The speech had been a call to arms, a rallying cry for the working class. And it had been a success.

"I believe that our country is at a crossroads," he had continued. "We must choose between the old ways and the new. We must choose between the rich and the poor, the haves and the have-nots."

The crowd had responded with a roar, and he had been reelected to the State Senate two years later. It was a moment he would never forget.

"I am proud to stand here tonight," he had said. "I am proud to be a part of this great nation."

And with those words, he had left the Coliseum, and the history of Pueblo had moved on.

STATEWIDE

Hear the speeches, see the candidates

Democrats will hold their state nominating convention in Pueblo tonight. It is an event that has been anticipated for months, and it will be a time of great excitement and change.

"I am looking forward to this convention," said State Senator Mary Taylor. "It will be a time of new beginnings, and I am excited to be a part of it."

The convention will feature candidates for all statewide offices, as well as County Commissioner, State Representative and State Senator.

"I am proud to be running for re-election," said County Commissioner John Smith. "I believe that I have been a good leader for this county, and I am looking forward to serving for another term."

The convention will also feature a keynote address from Democratic Governor Bill Daniels.

"I am excited to return to Pueblo," he said. "I believe that the people of this state are ready for change, and I am ready to lead them in that direction."
Student Senate reverses self: no change in campus zone services

Charles Kittleston

The UI Student Senate reversed itself Monday by voting to do nothing about a proposal to change parking in the Carver Complex. The senate had approved the proposal the previous week.

According to Dean, the idea of the current parking restrictions is to encourage the use of mass transit. He reported that the restrictions would affect students living within the complex area.

"A permit holder may park at university parking lots at $7 per day or park only after 4 p.m.," he said.

Department of Campus Services Director, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, said that extensions of CAMPUS service to the campus zones would be the responsibility of the state university.

Deady said that if CAMPUS would require a minimum of three buses to be available to meet the needs of the student body, he would request funding from the Senate for that purpose.

Deady also pointed out that the Senate would not approve any changes that would have a negative impact on the students.

Czarnecki seeks city-UI cooperation

Council hears state of city message

By Thomas Whalen

Iowa City Mayor Ed Gerow announced his second agenda item: "State of the City." He stated that the purpose of this meeting was to address issues that are currently being addressed by the state and the city.

"We need to be aware of the actions taken by the state and the city," Czarnecki said.

The councilors agreed to this motion and Czarnecki was asked to pursue this further.

Advisors of higher bus fares for the Iowa City Transportation System want to take a look at most of the system's routes. A city's subways, they argue, fares for other transit systems, they believe it's natural. If we take a look at some of the most bus routes, they suggest. These routes can be divided into two broad categories: those that are used frequently and those that are used infrequently.

Even though the Iowa City Transportation System is a public transit network, it is still a part of the city's public transportation system. As such, it is subject to the same regulations and policies as other public transportation systems in the city. This includes the need to ensure that fares are set at a level that is fair and reasonable for all users, regardless of their income or ability to pay.

However, there may be some exceptions to this rule. For example, certain routes may have lower ridership compared to other routes, which could lead to reduced revenue for the system. In such cases, it may be necessary to adjust fares in order to ensure that the system remains financially viable.

In conclusion, while it is important to ensure that fares are set at a level that is fair and reasonable for all users, it is also important to consider the needs of the system as a whole. This includes ensuring that the system remains financially viable, which may require adjusting fares in some cases.

Protecting The River of No Return from Boise Cascade

by Ted Breeden

As to my reason for entering. the one you want. It was a warm, foggy morning. My wife and I were looking for a place to go hiking, and we found the perfect spot. It was a small area near the river, and it was so quiet and peaceful.

We hiked through the forest, and we came across a beautiful waterfall. We took a moment to appreciate the beauty of the place, and then we continued on our hike.

In the past few days I have read about some of the efforts being made to protect the River of No Return from Boise Cascade. These efforts are important, and I support them wholeheartedly.

pered it is a priority for me. As a former local resident, I have witnessed the changes that have taken place in the area over the years. The river was once a thriving place, with a rich history and culture, but today it is a shadow of its former self.

I believe that it is important to protect the River of No Return for future generations to enjoy and appreciate. It is a place of beauty and tranquility, and it deserves to be preserved.

In conclusion, I support the efforts being made to protect the River of No Return from Boise Cascade. It is a place that is special to me, and I hope that it will be preserved for future generations to enjoy.

Male Go-Go

To the Editor:

I would like to express my thoughts on the recent developments in the world of men's fashion. As a fashion enthusiast, I have noticed a growing trend in men's clothing, which I find quite fascinating.

In particular, I have been observing the increasing popularity of 'male go-go' outfits. These outfits consist of bright colors, vibrant patterns, and stylish accessories, and they are worn by men of all ages and backgrounds.

I believe that this trend is a positive development, as it challenges traditional gender norms and allows men to express their individuality through their clothing choices.

I am excited to see how this trend will continue to evolve and how it will influence men's fashion in the future.

Sincerely,

Family adopts Vietnamese child

By ANITA KAMAL

Joelle Nguyen Kerns arrived in Des Moines this week. Kerns is the newest member of the four Kerns brothers, all adopted from Vietnam as infants.

Though social workers are instructed to refer children for adoption in pairs, the Kerns brothers are the only existing members of their group. Though two sets of twins are separated by only six months, they cannot be adopted together because they are not siblings. "It's a very frustrating situation," said Dave Kerns, 8, who lived with his twin brother Dave before adopting his baby sister.

The Kerns brothers are referred to as a gift from the Vietnamese government.

The brothers' adoption was prompted by the need for families to adopt orphans.

The Kerns brothers are proof that orphan adoption is possible.

The Kerns brothers are a testament to the ability of Vietnamese orphans to adapt to American life.

No family is perfect, but the Kerns brothers' story is a shining example of the potential for adoption to transform lives.
Welch: a searching radicalism

The swirling of the Average Man
By David Hoggan

I have never liked the term consumer. It's a perjorative. In the 1930s, it was a good word, connoting commodity buying. Nowadays, it is a word that makes one think of advertisements, of sales, of upward mobility. It is a word that is often used in a derogatory sense.

Hoggan has captured the spirit of the modern consumer in his novel, "The Blood," and in doing so, has created a work of fiction that is both realistic and prophetic.

The novel is set in a world where the average man is the focus of attention. The protagonist, a young, moderately radical American Indian named Lo, is a product of the reservation. He is a man of great dignity and almost ascetic desperation.

The novel is a study of the modern consumer society, of the individual's ability to resist the pressures of his environment. Lo is a man of great strength and determination, and his resistance to the forces that would destroy him is a testimony to the human spirit.

The novel is also a study of history, and the role it plays in shaping the individual's identity. Lo's grandfather and their strange, what historians call, "the Blood," is a glimpse into his own identity.

The novel is a study of meeting, the product of the reservation, and the expression of the self-indulgent, suggestive of a consumer advocate. South African poet Mshali finds Iowa an ideal place

By SARAH WEBSTER FADO

At first glance, the South African poet who came to Iowa to teach at the University of Iowa this fall looks like any other American. He is stocky and seems to enjoy the mild climate.

But Mshali has a difference that sets him apart from his American counterparts. He is a poet of the African continent. His name is South Africa's, and he is the first African poet to teach at the University of Iowa.

Mshali, who has lived in South Africa all his life, is a member of the black community. He is a member of the African National Congress, which is the ruling party in South Africa. He has been active in the struggle against apartheid, which is the policy of racial segregation in South Africa.

Mshali's poetry reflects his experiences in South Africa. His poems are filled with images of the land and its people. They are written in a style that is both sophisticated and simple.

Mshali's work has been published in several collections, including "African City Dwellers" and "To My Witchdoctor." He has also been a guest lecturer at several universities, including the University of California at Berkeley and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Mshali arrived in Iowa in September, and he has been busy since then. He has been giving readings and lectures, and he has been working on his own poetry.

Mshali's poetry is not easy to translate. It is written in a language that is difficult to pronounce, and it is filled with words that are not easily understood by English speakers.

But Mshali is determined to make his poetry accessible to English speakers. He has been working with translators to help them understand his work.

Mshali is also interested in teaching his students about African culture. He has been giving lectures on the history of South Africa, and he has been teaching his students about African literature.

Mshali is a member of the Black Students Union, and he is active in the African Student Association. He is also a member of the African National Congress, which is the ruling party in South Africa.

Mshali's poetry is a reflection of his experiences in South Africa. It is filled with images of the land and its people. It is written in a style that is both sophisticated and simple.

The strain is on the game shown on the face of Iowa's Kathy Myers, 13, as she looks as up as she can around Indiana's Kathy Martin. In the Hoosiers' 16-11 victory Monday night, Iowa's center Margie Rubow seemed ready to help out.

Wesleyan topples Hawks

By THOMAS H. CLARK

The Associated Press

Wesleyan used a late 15-3 run to beat Bowling Green, 45-37, today to wrap up the regular season in the Ohio Valley Conference, giving the Indians their first league championship.

The Indians, who finished the season 19-3, will take on a team that is 17-5 Monday night in the opening game of the conference tournament.

Bowling Green, which finished the season 16-6, will have a chance to win the conference championship with a win over the Indians.

Both teams are among the top four in the OVC standings, and the loser of Monday's game will have to wait until the conference tournament to see who comes out on top.

The Indians, who have been playing well lately, will be looking to continue their winning streak.

Bowling Green, on the other hand, will be looking to snap their losing streak.

The game will be held at 7 p.m. Monday night at the Field House on campus.

Hosiers unanimous pick

At the Indianapolis Press All-American Game in Indianapolis, Indiana, on June 8-9, the Hosiers and the Drillers played a 1-1 tie.

The game was a close one, with both teams playing well and putting in a good effort.

The Hosiers, who had just returned from the World Cup, had a chance to win the game, but they couldn't quite get it done, and the Drillers held on to get the tie.

The Hosiers are one of the top teams in the world, and they have a lot of talent on their roster.

The Drillers, on the other hand, are a young team, but they have a lot of potential.

Both teams are looking forward to the future, and they are excited to play against the Hosiers again in the future.

Iowa’s diamond in the rough—Dan Holm

By BRIAN SCHMIDT
Sports Editor

It was after the 1973-74 season that Iowa’s head wrestling coach, Don McDaniel, identified Dan Holm as the wrestler he would want in his program. Holm had already been a part of the team for three years, and McDaniel knew he had something special in this young man.

The Cyclones had just completed their second place NCAA finish. There was no pressure on the team, no expectations. They were just having fun. Holm was a part of the team, and McDaniel knew he had found his diamond in the rough.

The road to wrestling excellence begins with how you handle the wrestling clinic, where you are a part of the program’s continued success. The Cyclones had just completed their second place NCAA finish, and McDaniel knew Holm was key to the program’s future.

“Dan stands out about Iowa’s program no more now than he did then as an athlete. Dan’s a great character, a great athlete, a great student, a great citizen. He’s the kind of kid that you want to have as a student-athlete,” McDaniel said.
