Body

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The fully clothed body of deposed Bolivian President Juan Jose Torres, still wearing a coat, was found dumped on a rural roadside, authorities said Thursday.

They said the former general was blindfolded and had been shot twice in the neck and once behind the ear.

In an official statement, the Interior Ministry repudiated a wave of violence it said has smeared the country's image.

The left-wing Bolivian general, living in exile in Argentina, disappeared early Tuesday. Authorities said he was missing without a trace until late Wednesday when a ranch hand 65 miles from Buenos Aires heard shots and saw four men in a car speeding off, leaving a body behind. Police later identified the victim as Torres.

Angola

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Roving bands of guerrillas are continuing their fight in southern Angola against the new nation's Marxist government, according to authoritative sources.

The guerrillas, under the command of Jonas Savimbi, head of the National Union Angolan liberation movement known as Unita, are striking almost exclusively against the Cubans and Soviets supporting the government, senior Unita sources told The Associated Press. They left open the possibility of forming a government of national unity with the Soviet-supported Popular Movement — MPLA — now in office.

This possibility took on new significance Thursday when Unita informants in the Zambian capital of Lusaka said the president of Angola, Agostinho Neto, has invited Savimbi to peace talks in an apparent effort to avert a prolonged period of civil war in the former Portuguese territory.

'No sex'

HALLANDALE, Fla. (AP) — Claiming that a female jockey can't succeed unless she submits to sex with trainers and others in the racing establishment, an attractive 27-year-old rider is ending her career.

Donna Hillman told the SunSentinel in Pompano Beach that she is quitting to train and possibly breed horses. She said she might write a book exposing tracks as "a hooker's paradise."

"If you don't cooperate sexually, you don't get the mounts. It's that simple. I'm not saying they're all that way but there's enough that they're ruining the sport," Hillman said.

"There are more women coming on the track today who have made a lot of wrong moves to obtain their mounts. In return, they've made it tougher on the others."

Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Leftist intimidation squads brandished arms and built barricades, turning Beirut's Moslem quarter into a ghost city Thursday to protest Syrian military intervention in the Lebanese civil war.

The action by leftists and their Palestinian allies forced shops and street vendors to close.

The area went without electricity for the second straight day because of damage to powerlines from shelling in the suburbs. Some quarters also lacked water.

Hunt

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — "My father is a forgotten man, exiled and reviled," the daughter of imprisoned Watergate figure E. Howard Hunt Jr. says in an impassioned plea for his freedom.

"Richard Nixon has been forgiven by America. So have all the men who masterminded Watergate. Why not Howard Hunt? Is he to be crucified for the rest of his life?"

In an article in Wednesday's San Francisco Examiner, Lisa Tiffany Hunt Kyle wrote that her father has wasted away physically and undergone a slow "spiritual death" in prison.

Sentenced to 2 1/2 to 8 years and fined $10,000 for his role in the Watergate break-in, Hunt is scheduled for a parole hearing on Jan. 10, 1977. Also pending is a request for presidential clemency for the former White House consultant.

Hunt, a former CIA agent, pleaded guilty Jan. 11, 1973, to six counts of conspiracy, burglary, and wiretapping in the burglary. He and G. Gordon Liddy are the only men connected with Watergate and related offenses who are now in prison.

Poll

NEW YORK (AP) — Half of Jimmy Carter's supporters don't know where he stands on the issues, a quarter of them have the wrong idea of his positions and only about 20 per cent can correctly state his views, according to an Associated Press national poll.

The former Georgia governor's backers tend to think that he agrees with them on five major issues, showing that the broad support he has achieved in four months of intensive campaigning has come without a clear understanding of his positions by his backers.

The average percentage of Carter supporters who were right in pegging his stands was the lowest for any candidate listed in the poll.

May resign other leadership post

Hays relinquishes one chairmanship

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Wayne Hays quit as chairman of a Democratic campaign committee Thursday until investigations of his sex scandal are over. A colleague said Hays told him he also will step down temporarily as chairman of the House Administration Committee.

Under increasing pressure to resign the two leadership positions, Hays said he stepped aside as head of the House Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee because he doesn't want to be a liability to his colleagues.

Rep. John H. Dent of Pennsylvania, third-ranking Democrat on the Administration Committee and a friend of Hays, said the embattled congressman told him he plans to relinquish his job as chairman until the investigations are completed.

In other developments:

—The Justice Department was considering a civil suit against Hays, an informed source said.

The source said the department also was considering Elizabeth Ray as a possible target for the suit, or any staff member who authorized any illegal government salary for her.

Ray, a 33-year-old blonde, claims Hays, who is 65, put her on the committee payroll to provide him with sex. Hays admits a "personal relationship" with her but denies her duties were to be his mistress.

Requiring a government employee to provide sex as part of her job could violate laws against misusing public funds.

The purpose of a civil suit would be to recover any public money Ray was not entitled to, the source said. Under the False Claims Act, the government could collect double the amount it lost plus $2,000 in penalties.

Ray first worked for Hays in April 1974, but left for a stint in Hollywood. She went on the committee payroll last year and remained six months before she was fired. She got an annual salary of $14,000.

A civil suit would be separate from criminal investigations by the Justice Department and a federal grand jury. The source said a decision on a suit would be unlikely until after a decision is made on whether to prosecute. But prosecution would not preclude a suit, nor would a suit preclude prosecution, the source said.

Ray has been granted immunity from prosecution as long as she tells the truth.

—The House ethics committee discussed new names in the scandal. It told its staff to start interviewing possible witnesses, including Hays and Ray, and agreed on ground rules for its probe.

The committee met in closed session. Chairman John J. Flynt, D-Ga., said: "There are some things and some words I don't want to use publicly."

—Reps. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, and Robert Michel, R-Ill., cosponsored a resolution to strip the Administration Committee of its authority over congressional staff salaries and expenses. They called for such authority to be returned to the full House, which exercised it before Hays won it for his panel. —Of 17 Democrats on the committee, six indicated Hays should resign as chairman, at least until the investigations are finished. Two other Democratic members, Frank Annunzio of Illinois and Ed Jones of Tennessee, said they would wait to hear what Hays had to say to the panel.

Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin of California said Hays should not step down if he knows he is innocent of the allegations against him.

The eight other Democrats on the committee either could not be reached or had no comment.

Dent said Hays will meet with the committee next Wednesday to talk about his decision.

Restrictive rezoning plan once again hits stonewall

By DAVE HEMINGWAY
Staff Writer

The Iowa City Planning and Zoning Commission spent 20 minutes Thursday night tabling a controversial rezoning ordinance for the city's near north side, and another hour tabling a proposed, even more controversial, tree planting plan and ordinance.

The rezoning ordinance, which basically would reduce the number of apartments that could be constructed in the typically older-home area northeast of the UI, was deferred indefinitely. The ordinance had been revived by the commission after the City Council refused to consider the proposal last fall.

"This is not a re-affirmation of the appropriateness of the present zoning," commission member Pat Cain said after the proposal was tabled.

The rezoning proposal came to a standstill last year after it was questioned whether the rezoning would conflict with a 1961 study, generally considered the city's latest comprehensive plan. That study encouraged expanding the population base in the area instead of restricting it, as the present rezoning proposal would attempt to do. A legal opinion had been sought on the possible difference, but City Atty. John Hayek dismissed himself from the matter, saying a property he owned in the area might mean a conflict of interest for him. The City Council did not seek other legal opinions on the matter.

Commission chairman Dr. Robert Ogesen said two inquiries concerning the legal opinion "were left hanging," and no study has been completed on the matter since September. He said a study would be made before next February by the city's comprehensive planning staff.

Ogesen said that residents in the area would be asked for their input concerning the re-zoning, through neighborhood discussions rather than requiring the residents to come to the Civic Center.

Peter Dreyfuss, 528 N. Gilbert St., asked that the commission study the possibility of imposing a building moratorium in the area until the comprehensive planning staff could complete their study.

Ogesen said this suggestion would be considered at the commission's next meeting, June

When the commission considered the rezoning last fall, area residents said they feared an eventual appearance of "crackerbox" apartment complexes in their neighborhood.

Area developers, however, opposed the rezoning, which would require more square feet of land per apartment unit constructed. The developers charged that the more restricted zoning would force them to build in other areas of Iowa City where property values are higher.

The contractors said this would discourage new apartment construction and worsen the low-rent housing situation. They said that rents may be forced higher on new apartment complexes constructed in more expensive areas, which might be followed by other Iowa City landlords.

In other action Thursday night, the proposed tree planting plan and ordinance was sent back to the comprehensive planning staff for reworking after several area contractors expressed their disapproval of the measure.

The proposed ordinance regulates the planting of trees in new developments of residential areas, along streets and in parking lots. Similar structures already in existence would not be required to meet these requirements, but assistance would be available to persons who wished to plant trees.

Pat Moore, an Iowa City contractor, spoke against the code saying that it took the legislative power of a group "way too far."

"Don't you people try to be a communist party and tell us how to do it," he said.

Moore and other contractors complained that requiring developers to plant trees would be too expensive.

Contractors said that the cost required to maintain trees, aside from the cost of purchasing and installing them, was too much to validate the aesthetic effects desired.

Rick Geshwiler, city planner, said that the contractors overlooked the main intent of the ordinance. "The main reason for the ordinance is to provide more physical benefits," he said.

In a sheet from the city describing the goals of the ordinance, advantages in cutting down noise pollution, soil erosion and extra insulation from wind are listed.

What chances for approval does Johnson County's $6.5 million bond issue have in Tuesday's referendum?

"Not too good," Iowa City Mayor Mary Neuhauer said recently, although she quickly added that there "does not seem to be much organized opposition."

"I don't see any way it's going to be passed," Johnson County Sheriff Gary D. Hughes said in May, because "nothing has been given to the public — cost or reason."

The $6.5 million bond issue is to pay for the renovation of the Johnson County Courthouse and for the construction of a new county administration-joint law enforcement center building. The county office wing of the building would be the home for several county departments that operate out of temporary structures near the courthouse or in other buildings. The joint law enforcement wing would house the county sheriff's department and the Iowa City Police Department.

Although still skeptical, city and county officials are becoming more optimistic that the referendum will be approved. To be approved, the bond issue will have to be favored by at least 60 per cent of the voters.

The bond issue question is included in Tuesday's county and state primary election, which Neuhauer said was detrimental to passage of the bond issue.

"It's a tremendous amount of money and needs a long period of preparation. The attention will be with the primary. To get the bond issue passed, you must generate a lot of attention to it. Instead, people will be out campaigning for their candidates."

In the middle of May, a citizens' advisory committee, appointed by the Johnson County Board of Supervisors, and the League of Women Voters began putting up displays of the proposed building around the city to publicize the bond referendum.

Two citizens' informational meetings about the bond issue were held this week — although only 10 persons attended them.

Hughes cited one factor he considered would hurt the passage: "The major newspaper (the Iowa City Press-Citizen) is against it. I just wish the publisher (William Eginton) would come over and see how prisoners live. Then he'd change his mind."

(Editor's Note: Thursday, after Hughes had made his comments, the Press-Citizen endorsed the bond issue, urging voters to vote "yes" on the question.)

Richard Bartel, former member and chairman of the supervisors, said he believes it might take two or three attempts before the bond issue passes. "It'll take the public that long to be aware of the need." However, he added that he's surprised at the momentum the issue has picked up recently.

Iowa City Police Chief Harvey Miller did not comment on whether he thought the bond issue would pass, but he said the "proper packaging" of the bond issue would be extremely important.

"The bond issue is the county's issue," he said. "It's not my responsibility. Bond issues are political questions, not administrative."

The bond issue has been endorsed by the Johnson County Regional Planning Commission, the Old Capitol Kiwanis Club, courthouse department heads and employees, the Iowa City Council, the Johnson County Bar Association, the supervisors, the Citizen's Advisory Committee, the League of Women Voters, Citizens for a Better Iowa City, Hughes and Miller. Out of the 15 candidates for supervisor in Tuesday's primary, only James Powers and Donald Riley have verbally opposed the bond issue.

The city will be charged $142,000 more than the county over a 20-year period for operating costs in the joint facility because the city will use 70 per cent of it, compared with the county's 30 per cent. But this can change from year to year.

Yagla pushes mop, ponders mat future

By STEVE TRACY
Staff Writer

Chuck Yagla slowly pushed a dust mop back and forth across the tile floor. The 149-pound frame stopped and leaned on the long handle, and Yagla started talking about wrestling — as he's done so many times before with hundreds of reporters.

Whether it was because it's a topic he discusses every day, or because he was simply lost in his work, the championship wrestler did a good job containing any excitement about a possible spot on the 1976 Olympic wrestling team.

"It's sort of a funny thing for me," Yagla said. "I haven't been able to get all that excited about the Olympics. The college season has been so long, and it's the first time I haven't had to think about next year. It's a different feeling."

The Russian roulette type of Olympic qualifying events are coming to a close with the finals in Brockport, N.Y., June 18-19. The top eight finishers in the Cleveland try-outs, which were held in May, will travel to Brockport.

Yagla placed fifth in Cleveland and will have to compete with the fourth-through-eighth place finishers in the opening tournament at Brockport. The winner of the tournament will then climb the ladder, facing the third-place Cleveland finisher until three wrestlers are left. The top finisher will be the only wrestler in the 149 1/2 pound Olympic weight class with the other two qualifiers going to Montreal as alternates.

Yagla voiced some disappointment in his fifth-place finish, but the competitive spirit still lingers.

"I'd never wrestled either of the two guys that beat me, and now I know I can beat both of them — at the right time."

The dust mop glided across the floor a few times and then stopped.

"The Olympic trials are a lot different," Yagla said. "I don't really get nervous anymore, but these trials are hard to get used to since they don't give any riding time, which is one of my best areas."

A little more than riding time, though, gave Yagla 40 season victories in 1975-76, and the NCAA and Big Ten Conference championships the last two years.

"I started thinking about the Olympics when I first came to school here," adds Yagla. "If I don't make it this time I would really like to be ready by 1980."

Nineteen eighty is four years in the future, but wrestling is not going to drop out of his upcoming events even though his college days are completed. "There's one thing about wrestling. I've been in it so long I couldn't think of dropping it."

Yagla stopped and leaned back on the mop, thinking about the future. "When I came here, I had no desire to coach," said the business-education major. "But now I'm going to try to get a job in the coaching area somewhere. Most of my satisfaction comes from competition, and I can still achieve that through coaching."

Maybe the excitement of the upcoming Olympics wasn't showing, but something was on Yagla's mind: Either his past college career, the Olympics or his possible coaching future. It was evident. He had pushed the dust mop over the same small area of the tile floor for more than 20 minutes. If he is as thorough on the wrestling mat as he is with the dust mop, he hasn't got anything to worry about. Chances are he'll clean up.

City forced to pay debt

Land purchase up in air

By DAVE HEMINGWAY
Staff Writer

Iowa City's possible purchase of wooded riverfront land, south of the city, for additional parks and recreation space may be in jeopardy due to a recent federal decision.

That decision, by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), forces Iowa City to pay off its $4.4 million urban renewal debt with HUD out of some of the city's federal Housing and Community Development Act (HCDA) funds. Various city agencies, including the City Council, have debated using part of the city's HCDA allocation for purchase of the 47 acres of riverfront land.

The Committee on Community Needs, a citizen's committee which advises the City Council on use of the HCDA grants, recommended Wednesday that the riverfront acquisition be deleted from funding out of next year's HCDA allocation. Revenues generated from this and other cuts amounting to about $412,000, would be used to help pay off the urban renewal debt.

Other areas the committee suggested cutting, as necessary, were parks improvements and operating costs ($5,000) for the committee.

The City Council has yet to decide how much of the city's annual HCDA allocation it will use to pay the urban renewal debt.

HUD's decision requiring use of HCDA monies to pay the $4.4 million debt came as a result of a district court ruling that prevented the city from selling the 11.5 acres of downtown urban renewal land to Old Capitol Associates, the firm contracted for the urban renewal redevelopment. Revenues from the land sale were to have been used to pay off the debt.

Following that decision, HUD ruled that Iowa City must use at least 20 per cent of its HCDA monies for fiscal years 1977 and 1978 to help pay off the debt. This minimum requirement amounts to about $412,000 each year, City Manager Neal Berlin said.

Iowa City is eligible to receive about $8.2 million during fiscal years 1976-1980, with allocations of about $2 million for the first three years and decreasing amounts for the last two years.

The Committee on Community Needs has begun re-ordering its plan for appropriating the HCDA monies. Wednesday the committee categorized community programs to be funded under four headings, in order of funding priority: no cut-minimal cut, initial implementation (programs that will be started to some extent), planning only (programs that will not go beyond planning stages in the next fiscal year) and programs to be cut.

The programs which are not being cut include the development of the city's comprehensive plan, housing rehabilitation, housing code enforcement, removal of architectural barriers to the handicapped and elderly and urban renewal close-out.

The Ralston Creek flood-control project was listed under programs to receive initial implementation, which will probably mean that HCDA funding will be used to pay for various flood-control studies.

The neighborhood center project was listed to receive funds for planning only.

"I'm sure that I speak for everyone on the committee in saying that there was just no good place to cut," committee member Robert Hibbs said.

Hibbs said the rationale behind the listing was to keep the programs "which served as many people as possible for the amount of money involved."

After receiving slightly more than $2 million from Old Capitol for the renewal properties, the city had expected to receive the final installment, about $2.5 million, from its initial $9.1 urban renewal grant from HUD. This money was to be used to pay off about $4.5 million in private notes the city had borrowed to buy up the downtown land for renewal.

However, both sources of funding disappeared for the near future after the district court's ruling. The city eventually paid off the private notes with emergency loans from HUD.

Hopefuls vie in Tuesday primary

By MARK MITTELSTADT
City Editor

A myriad of candidates will be vying for the support of Johnson County voters in Tuesday's county and state primary election.

Up for grabs are positions on the Nov. 2 general election ballot for all elective county offices, state seats in the Iowa House of Representatives, some Iowa Senate seats and Iowa's First Congressional District post. However, due to a lack of candidates, the only real competition Tuesday will be for the offices of Johnson County auditor, all three positions on the county Board of Supervisors, state senator from the 36th District and state representative from the 25th, 72nd, 73rd and 75th districts.

All real contests except two, the 36th Senate district and the 75th House district, will be among Democrats.

Also to be decided Tuesday among Johnson County voters is a $6.5 million county bond issue referendum. (See story, page one.)

Johnson County residents who have previously registered to vote and have not moved or changed their names and have voted at least once in the past four years are eligible to vote. Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.

One race that will have one of the most confusing outcomes is the contest for two four-year terms on the county Board of Supervisors. A field of 10 Democratic aspirants will be whittled down to two for the general election Nov. 2. Only two Republican candidates, Bob Baker and John W. Johnson, have officially announced their candidacies for the board, automatically placing them on the Nov. 2 ballot.

The highest vote-getter in each party will square off in a race for a supervisor term that begins Nov. 9 and will be renewed on Jan. 1 for four years. This is to fill an unexpired term that became vacant after the resignation this spring of former Supervisor Richard Bartel. A three-member county selection committee, as required by Iowa law, chose a replacement for Bartel, but the position will again be open Nov. 9.

The second highest vote-getter for the Democrats and the other Republican will vie for a four-year term that begins Jan. 1.

Democrats fighting to stay alive for these positions in the November general election are: Lorada E. Citek, an incumbent supervisor; Clifford H. Hess; Michael Kattchee; Louis L. Kulish; Robert E. Long; Max R. Miltner; James W. Powers; Donald L. Riley; Don Sehr; and James W. Bogart.

There is a third supervisor term up for grabs on the primary ballot. This spot is also to fill an unexpired term, left vacant when former Supervisor Robert Burns resigned in Dec. 1975. Three Democrats are in the running for this position: Harold Donnelly, incumbent Supervisor Robert Lenz and Janet Shipton. No Republicans have announced for this position, so the winner Tuesday will be the board member unless someone announces by petition for the Nov. 2 election. This board position will begin Nov. 9 and last for two years and seven weeks.

The winning candidates for all positions on the Nov. 2 ballot must receive at least 35 per cent of the vote. If they do not, the positions will be decided at a county nominating convention, according to County Auditor Delores Rogers.

The other actual contests for spots on the Nov. 2 ballot are for the county auditor's position, where Rogers and Thomas Slockett are running. In the 73rd state representative district (west Iowa City and Coralville), three-time Democratic Rep. Arthur Small Jr. is facing stiff opposition from Democrat Jean Lloyd-Jones.

In the 74th House district, (east Iowa City and southern Johnson County), Democratic Rep. William J. Hargrave is running unopposed.

Candidates running unopposed by either party for county positions include incumbent Clerk of Court E.J. Wombaker, Democrat, and Sheriff Gary Hughes, Republican.

The right way to pour beer never changes. Since the dawn of organized brewing back in 800 A.D., brewmasters have urged discriminating drinkers to pour straight into the head, and not into a tilted receptacle. Although blatantly defiant of sacred collegiate tradition, the original method has the meritorious advantage of producing a seal between the head and the drink itself, trapping the carbonation below. The beer doesn't go flat. The method remains true. When it comes to pouring beer, the brewmasters were right from the beginning. When it came to making beer, so was Oly. Skill and ingenuity just can't be improved upon. Some things never change. Olympia never will.

Tolerance ducks into closet for gay wedding

By MARK KLEIN
Staff Writer

Tracy and Ken wanted to be married. But because of one overriding fact, their request for a license was denied May 14 by County Atty. Jack Dooley. The fact is Ken and Tracy are men, and Iowa laws appear to allow marriage only between persons of the opposite sex. Since the county attorney's decision, they have sought the advice of the Iowa Civil Liberties Union, which may be studying the problem for as long as six months.

In an interview Tuesday, the two conceded that the matter is no longer personal, but is now a legal consideration. But when their legal procedure is ended, Tracy and Ken see either outcome — whether they can or cannot marry — as having benefits.

Ken Bunch, 24, is from a family of Mennonite background and is now a custodian at the UI Hospitals. Tracy Bjorgum, 20, is a freshman psychology student whose family has lived in Canada, Mexico and the United States.

Bunch said he first pondered marriage to Bjorgum in December 1975, but neither considered taking such a step until after the Gay Pride Conference this past May.

"The conference was a catalyst," Bjorgum said, "and it gave us the impetus to do it. It was just the spirit of the conference: the interactive factor — the energy — of being with so many gays."

The conference was like a political convention. And one emphasis—in a sense, a plank—of the conference was gay rights and recognition.

Whether or not Bunch and Bjorgum are granted a license, they said their request will have productive results both in the gay and the "straight" communities.

If they could be wed, Bjorgum said that will be "fine. It would open the field for other gays who would like to be married."

Bunch said he was contacted by a man in Des Moines who also wanted to marry another man but was despondent that their chances of being granted a license were doubtful.

Bunch and Bjorgum said they are fortunate being in Iowa City, since both have secure positions and need not fear scathing backlash.

They said they have received encouragement from many within the gay community.

Legalizing marriage between two men in Iowa would be a break with a state tradition that dates back to 1843. Even the county attorney said, in a statement issued May 14, "This is a question of first impression in Iowa."

Throughout the nation in recent years, the case for homosexual marriage has been blocked by state supreme courts.

In a case similar to Bunch and Bjorgum's, the Minnesota high court described statutory marriage as a state of union between persons of the opposite sex.

Furthermore, the court held in the 1971 case that such legislation did not offend the First, Eighth, Ninth or Fourteenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

Recent cases in the states of Washington and Kentucky reached the same conclusions.

If Bunch and Bjorgum are denied the right to marry, they said the time and energy they've invested will not have been in vain.

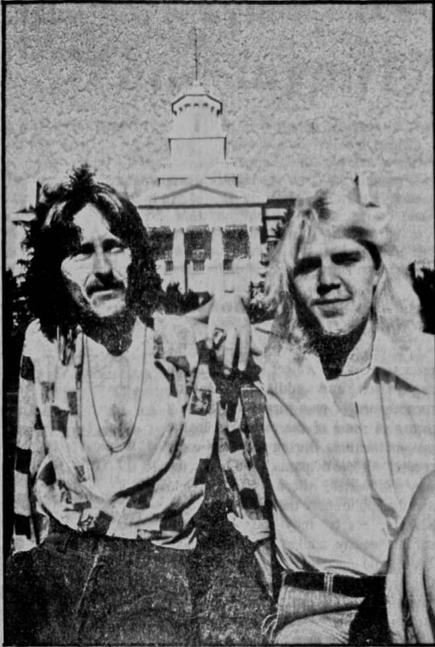

A denial would show "open discrimination against gays," Bunch said. The two men hope that the publicity their case has received "will force people in the 'straight' community to think of a gay marriage as a valid option," Bjorgum said.

The final outcome is open to speculation, but people are traditionally reluctant to alter precedents rooted in the past.

A friend of the two, present during the interview, said the current case reminds her of the flak against racially mixed marriages years ago. "People were eventually forced to accept it," she said, "but they won't give Ken and Tracy the right to be wed."

So far, Bunch and Bjorgum's case maintains this precedent. It was on May 11 that the two approached the county clerk's office with their blood test papers and a witness.

They were allowed to fill out an application for a marriage license and were told to return three days later — after the "cooling off" period.

Ken and Tracy

That day the clerk of the district court, E.J. Wombacher, wondering if the request conformed to the law, wrote to the office of the county attorney and requested legal advice.

County Atty. Jack Dooley wrote on May 14 that in the Code of Iowa there are "neither explicit authorization nor prohibition of the issuance of a license to two males."

"The Iowa Code is replete, however, with references to male and female parties to the marriage," the report continued.

"The conclusion to be drawn from these sorts of legislative provisions must be, implicitly, that marriage has been envisioned, from the territorial enactments of 1843 to the present, as a contract available only to persons of the opposite sex."

Dooley wrote in the report that questions may remain on the constitutionality of such legislation, and that "the applicants' appropriate recourse is to the Legislature."

And so, the story captured the attention of Iowa's news media. Bunch and Bjorgum estimated that they have been interviewed by four TV stations, about seven newspapers and even more radio stations.

On one hand, they appreciate the publicity for their case. They said they want heterosexuals to at least think of gay marriage as an alternative, and the media has helped to spread that message.

But, on the other hand, publicity involves early morning interviews complete with questions delving into their sex lives.

Such questions surprised Bunch and Bjorgum, who said, "Sex is not the main thing. Gayness affects all parts of our life: How we act and react, our likes and dislikes and not just who we go to bed with."

"Ignorance and toleration is not what we want," Bjorgum continued. "We want the right to exist. The fact that we are considered non-people is real upsetting."

Some of the news, Bunch said, reached his parents' home town and they were "legitimately freaked out by heavy pressure" within their community, he said.

An obvious question to ask is what would their union be like if they were allowed to marry? Could it be a valid alternative to a heterosexual union?

Neither said they believe in the traditional roles in marriage of one partner being passive and the other aggressive.

They describe their relationship now as being "open," and they would expect their marriage to be the same because, as Bunch said, "We would both assume the responsibility for everything."

"There aren't any traditional patterns for gay marriage, so it's open for experimentation," Bjorgum said.

Concerning an eventual breakup, they said they hope their marriage wouldn't be of a fire-cracker quality — one big poof and then nothing. Bjorgum said, "We'll remain together until something goes wrong."

Despite all odds, Bunch and Bjorgum are going their gay way in that futilely narrow bottleneck of a "straight" society.

Facilities

according to Dick Pattschull, of the architectural firm Wehner, Nawysz and Pattschull, which designed the proposed building.

Almost 70 per cent (69.59) of the eligible voters in the county live in Iowa City, but Iowa City voters will pay (through taxes) only 49.17 per cent of the $6.5 million.

There is little concern among officials about potential conflict between the sheriff's department and the police department in the joint facility.

According to the floor plan of the joint law enforcement center, the sheriff's and police chief's offices are on opposite sides of the building. Pattschull said this was done because the departments are "two separate entities."

Records and communications services, which will be shared, are centrally located. Hughes said juvenile and narcotic departments may be somewhat combined, but not general criminal departments. Miller said the housing will lead to close cooperation for investigative functions.

The major element is that patrol remains separate," Miller said. "This is not a move toward consolidation and it is not blurring the distinction of the two (agencies)."

Miller said management relations must be carefully delineated to "obviate personality relations," since the city has had many police chiefs during the last several years and the sheriff is an elected official.

"The greatest turnover has surprisingly been at the city level, which says something about city government in Iowa City," he said. He also said the management must be worked out by elected officials because contracts won't "bind it."

Hughes said he can't foresee anyone running for sheriff that would cause personality problems because the sheriff is the only law enforcement employee directly responsible to the voters.

The Coralville Police Department and the UI Dept. of Transportation and Security were invited to join in the facility but chose not to. Hughes said he felt UI President Willard Boyd's approach toward law enforcement is more security-oriented.

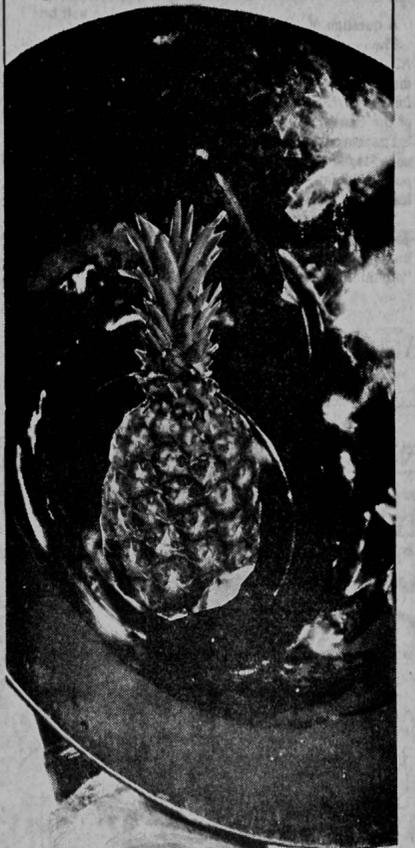

"The demand (for law enforcement) is in Iowa City and the rural areas," Miller said. "That's where the people are. Coralville is a separate issue. There's parochial pride in having your own department — parochial politics enter in."

If the bond issue passes, building of the new facilities will begin in the middle of June 1977. Pattschull estimated that it would take 18-24 months to build.

The present sheriff's department building, including the jail, which is located west of the courthouse, will be razed. Those facilities will be added on to an existing maintenance building on IWV Road, west of Iowa City.

Pattschull said there will be plenty of time to complete this by June 1977, estimating that it would take about six months to finish. After the new joint law enforcement center is built, Pattschull said, the sheriff's facilities would be removed from the maintenance building so the county could continue to use the building.

Walters bids farewell to NBC

NEW YORK (AP) — Barbara Walters, who says she began on NBC's "Today" as "a sort of glorified tea-pourer," ended her 16 years with the show today as an established star pouring champagne and heading for ABC with a five-year contract reportedly paying her $1 million a year.

"Shhh — sleep late. Tomorrow I'm not on," she stage-whispered to viewers during her last live appearance on the show. She'll appear on it Friday, but only in a taped salute to her native Massachusetts. Studio 3-K at NBC, where "Today" is televised, slowly filled with reporters, photographers, friends and well-wishers during the program. Afterward, there was a champagne party in the studio.

"It saddens me that much more has been made about the money than about the precedent of my new assignment," she said, observing that "it is the American way not to turn down a raise."

Betty Furness, a consumer affairs reporter for WNBC-TV here, will start filling in for Walters on a temporary basis, starting Monday.

Historian rewrites past

'White-inspired' texts criticized

By HAL CLARENDON
Staff Writer

Herbert Aptheker remembers when textbooks referred to blacks as "darkies" and "coons." He remembers when Nat Turner, who led the first open black rebellion in the South, was called a "crazy Negro" in the press. Black history was then, in the late 1930s, lily white.

Times have changed. Aptheker spoke Wednesday night at the eighth annual Institute of Afro-American Culture about matters black and white. He spoke, in other words, for the black voice in white American history.

In his speech, "The Abolitionist Movement and the Black Liberation Movement: An Analytical Comparison," he denied that the abolitionist movement was white-inspired as it has so often been characterized in white-written history books. History texts in America, Aptheker told his audience, either omit blacks or present them as people without a past. There has not yet been, he claimed, a black voice heard in American history.

Aptheker, in his massive three-volume Documentary History of the Negro in the U.S., records the black voice in early America. Aptheker refuses the all-knowing historian's voice.

The American press has, according to Aptheker, rephrased crucial events in black American history. In the early summer of 1831, for example, the American press was lavish in its praise of Polish rebels fighting czarist oppression. But by late summer, when news of Nat Turner's Virginia uprising came, the black rebels were called "blood thirsty wolves and deluded wretches," in the American press. Black-written accounts of the uprising never appeared.

Aptheker became interested in the silence that was black history in the 1930s after he went to Alexander City, Ala. "The depression was awful in New York," he remembers, "but it was starvation in Alabama." Living, as he calls it, both "black and white" he saw firsthand the injustice that he had never read about in print.

He went back to New York and wrote his Ph.D. thesis at Columbia on Nat Turner — published as The American Negro Slavery Revolts in 1831.

A member of the Communist party for 40 years, Aptheker has participated in what he calls "the egalitarian struggle against oppression." He considers the black civil rights movement to be part of this struggle. "The liberation of the slaves was a significant component of the world labor movement," he said in his lecture. "The emancipation proclamation was a great document in the history of the working people."

Aptheker is himself involved in what he sees as one such struggle. A professor of history at Hostos College in New York City, he has seen his college closed by the city of New York to save $2 million. One subway stop away, $100 million was spent, partly by the city, on the refurbishment of Yankee Stadium. Aptheker said he has joined pickets to protest the closing.

It's the same old story, Aptheker believes. Without the means to an education, blacks and other minorities will be ill-equipped to hear or speak the voices of their own history.

Martha Mitchell buried in small Arkansas town

PINE BLUFF, Ark. (AP) — Martha Mitchell, who spoke when much of Washington was silent on Watergate, was buried Thursday. She was described as one who found that "even great cities have their limitations and imperfections."

Mitchell, 57, once an aspiring actress, was a belle of the ball in this Arkansas River city more than three decades ago. She died of bone cancer Monday in a New York City hospital.

Her silver, carnation-laden casket was buried in the shade of great oaks at the foot of her mother's grave in the Beall family plot at Bellwood Cemetery.

Mitchell's estranged husband, former U.S. Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, the couple's daughter and Mitchell's son by a previous marriage attended the services at the First Presbyterian church and at the gravesite.

Immediately after the five-minute eulogy at the grave, John Mitchell left without speaking to anyone.

One of about 30 floral arrangements at the gravesite said in six-inch letters: "Martha was right." Adam Robinson Jr., one of the funeral directors, said he did not know who sent those flowers.

Other apparent allusions to Watergate came when the Rev. Richard A. Dodd referred to Mitchell's discovery of imperfections in great cities and when the Rev. Dr. W. L. McColgan said, "Out of the turbulence of her day, there will come a great revival."

Cornelia Wallace, wife of Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, attended the services. Mitchell and Wallace became friends after they met in 1973 in a drugstore in Key Biscayne, Fla.

S. Ray West Jr. of Pine Bluff, one of Mitchell's closest friends, told reporters that "even if everyone didn't agree with her, the country will miss her. She was one of the few shining lights during the Nixon years."

Criminal code still in limbo

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The repeal of Iowa's motorcycle helmet law may not become effective July 1 as voted by the legislature. That's because Gov. Robert Ray may not sign the massive rewrite of Iowa criminal law by that date.

"I would assume that if the law is not signed by July 1, it is not effective until Aug. 15," said Steven Cross, secretary of the Senate.

Most sections of the new criminal code are not scheduled to become effective until Jan. 1, 1978, to give lawyers and judges time to become familiar with the new provisions. But the legislature made a few sections, including the motorcycle helmet law repeal, effective July 1, 1976.

Final action on that bill was not taken until near the end of the legislative session last week. The bill must first be put into shape before it can be sent to the governor for his signature.

Magna Carta, nanny arrive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Accompanied by high-stepping British guardsmen, presented by robed and bewigged leaders of the British Parliament, one of Great Britain's most historic documents took up temporary residence in the United States on Thursday.

The Magna Carta, a 761-year-old pact guaranteeing certain individual freedoms, also came with what one member of the British Embassy staff said was its own nanny.

The document is one of four remaining copies of the Magna Carta, written in 1215 to limit King John's royal authority and insure certain rights to his subjects. It set forth principles embodied centuries later in the U.S. Bill of Rights, including the right of trial by a jury of peers.

The document was displayed in the rotunda of the U.S. Capitol in a gold-embellished showcase designed especially for its American debut.

Inside, the charter, written in Latin and presented to King John by his barons at Runnymede, lay in an air-tight enclosure, surrounded by "the air it has breathed" for centuries "so it won't know it's left England and won't suffer culture shock," said Diana Fortescue, the British Embassy's bicentennial officer.

An English language translation of the Latin is embossed in gold on glass standing above the parchment copy.

Fortescue said the document was accompanied to the United States by the man in charge of its safety at the British Museum. She described him as the charter's "nanny ... who talks to it, makes sure it's slept well."

The document is a temporary gift of the British people to mark the American Bicentennial.

House Speaker Carl Albert called the charter's display in Congress "the most significant part of our bicentennial celebration."

A gold-leaf replica of the charter will remain in this country after the parchment copy is returned to England.

Free entertainment offered in city parks

BY BECKY COLEMAN
Staff Writer

Summer Celebration, a series of free concerts and performances in Iowa City during June, is sure to ease your mind without pinching your pocket.

Rock music, jazz, bluegrass and mixed media performances will be presented Sundays in City Park and Mondays in the Blackhawk mini-park on the corner of Dubuque and Washington streets, according to Marilyn Levin, coordinator of the program. The concerts are sponsored by the Iowa City Parks and Recreation Department and the Iowa City-Johnson County Arts Council.

Iowa City has sponsored performing artists in the parks in previous years, Levin said, but the program was limited to artists who played for free. This year, however, money remained in a teen dance fund that had to be spent before the end of the fiscal year, June 30. The money was used to establish Summer Celebration.

While the entire schedule of events is not yet complete, here is a partial list of happenings:

Saturday, June 5: rock and roll with Southfield Junction, Madness and Fanfare at 1 p.m. at Hillside Stage (the old bear cages) in City Park.

Sunday, June 6: progressive jazz with Jupiter Fish, a special group of jazz artists, gathered for this concert, including Michael Lytle, Don Edelbrock, Mark Schubert, John Leeke, Lynn Willard and Paul Berner. The group will perform at 4 p.m. at Hillside Stage in City Park.

Monday, June 7: Ric Weber at 7:30 p.m. at the Blackhawk mini-park.

Sunday, June 13: large bluegrass concert in City Park.

Monday, June 14: Greg Powers, mime, and Lytle, clarinet, will perform at 7:30 p.m. in the Blackhawk mini-park.

Sunday, June 27: summer workshop by the American Media Manifesto Committee, and "In Progress" performance by a group composed of dancers, mimists, musicians and visual artists who combine their talents in improvisation.

Levin said other performers will be announced, and concerts will be presented each Sunday and Monday during June. Anyone interested in performing in the park during the summer should contact Levin at the Iowa City Recreation Center.

City loses another renewal case

By a Staff Writer

Iowa City received yet another blow to its urban renewal project Wednesday, this time losing a settlement in a building condemnation case.

A Johnson County District Court jury awarded $15,000 to the owner of the Vine Tavern, formerly located at 119 S. Clinton St., which was razed for eventual construction of a municipal parking lot.

The tavern's owner, Terry O'Brien, claimed that the city did not compensate him for fair market value of the property when the building was condemned in 1973. In August of that year, the Johnson County Compensation Commission decided that Iowa City should pay O'Brien $7,200 as compensation.

The city claimed that O'Brien's claim was invalid, and appealed the commission's decision to district court. While the case was pending, the court ordered Iowa City to pay 90 percent of the $7,200 to O'Brien. The district court jury, after hearing two days of testimony, then ruled the value of O'Brien's leasehold on the property to be $15,000.

Ten similar condemnation appeals are pending before the court.

INGMAR BERGMAN'S MONIKA

Through the inclusion of nude footage never intended for the original, MONIKA was unfortunately exploited as a sex film in this country during its initial release, and only recently has gained recognition as the masterpiece it is. The austere simplicity of Bergman's direction of MONIKA has produced a naturalistic documentary of sensuality rather than a cheap exploitation epic.

THEY LIVE BY NIGHT

1948, Director: Nicholas Ray
Farley Granger, Cathy O'Donnell

Ray's earliest directorial effort was a daring film for its time: the story of a young escaped convict and his girlfriend who, together, attempt to create a place of their own apart from society. In 1973 Robert Altman adapted the same novel for THIEVES LIKE US. Although their films contain some striking similarities, each director reveals the vision of his particular decade.

THIEVES LIKE US

1973, color, 123 min.
Director: Robert Altman
Cast: Keith Carradine, Shelley Duvall, John Schuck, Bert Remsen

Robert Altman captures both lost time and environment in this film of doomed young love during the depression. It is primarily the story of two people who happen to fall in love at a time when survival is particularly difficult, but there are peripheral stories of bank robberies and other high adventures which surround the couple.

UI Rugby

The UI Rugby Club is traveling to Des Moines this weekend to play in the Midwest Seven-A-Side tournament. Teams will compete with only seven players on the field at one time, making for a more wide-open style of play involving more scoring than in regular 15-man rugby. The locals plan to take enough rugger for at least two teams. The action will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday at Fort Des Moines.

Track meet

The annual Lake Macbride Classic track meet will be held Saturday, June 5, at the Solon High School track. Last year over 300 athletes competed in the event; this year more contestants are expected with the addition of competition in all age divisions and a coed 400-relay event. The meet will start at 11 a.m. but competitors are urged to arrive early for registration.

Frisbee

A number of downtown businesses are sponsoring a frisbee tournament to be held in the lower half of City Park, beginning at 1:30 p.m., Saturday, June 5. There will be eight different categories for competition, including flight, curve, distance, etc. There will be two divisions, one for persons 18 years of age and under, and another for those over 18.

Baseball poll

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The final "Collegiate Baseball" newspaper poll of the season Thursday set up a College World Series showdown between the country's top two teams—Arizona State and Arizona.

In the final poll, Arizona State was first with 493 power-index points and Arizona was no. 2 with 489 points. The two teams are among eight bound for the College World Series, beginning June 11 in Omaha, Neb.

Arizona State takes a 20-game winning streak and a 52-8 record into the series. Arizona is 51-16 and has won seven straight.

The two teams meet for their first series game on June 12 in the double elimination tournament. ASU took six straight from Arizona in regular-season play this year.

The other six teams in the College World Series also are ranked in the top 10. Eastern Michigan is first, Oklahoma fourth, Clemson fifth, Washington State seventh, Auburn eighth and Maine 10th.

Non-series teams in the top 10 are Texas in sixth place and No. 9 Jacksonville.

In the college division, Florida Southern finished on top with a 30-11 record. Two other Florida schools, No. 4 Rollins and sixth-place Eckerd, had dominated the rankings all season, taking turns in the No. 1 spot.

Also in the top 10 were Cal Poly at Pomona in second place, Southeast Missouri third, Southern Illinois at Edwardsville fifth, Livingston, Ala., Seventh, Madison, Va., eighth, Sacred Heart (Conn.) ninth; and New Haven, Conn., 10th.

Infection may stop Marine's swim bid

BELLEVEUE, Iowa (AP) — Marine Capt. Alan Jones once did 51,000 consecutive sit-ups, but the Vietnam veteran — stricken with severe body sores and unable to bend one leg — may succumb to poison ivy in his attempt to swim 700 miles of the Mississippi River.

His companion, insurance agent Wayne Thompson, 33, Portland, Ore., remains healthy.

"I may have to consider stopping," he determined, 29-year-old Jones, a Purple Heart winner in Vietnam, said here Thursday.

"But at this point I plan to struggle on as long as I can. Part of the game in river swimming is to expect some problems.

"I went to a Dubuque hospital last night and the doctors are quite concerned. They felt I should abandon the swim entirely and not return to the water for several weeks."

Jones, 5-foot-9 and 140 pounds, has lost eight pounds in his fight against the river. He said he was given antibiotic shots at the hospital and "was supposed to return for further treatment today.

"But because of our commitments (to welcoming groups) along the river, I'm going to continue as long as I can."

Jones' infection broke out Wednesday. "It's really getting bad," he said. "I have 10 or 12 large, open running sores and my right leg is swelled so I can't bend it now.

"A little bit of infection is creeping into my left leg. So far the infection is confined mostly to my lower body.

"Doctors don't really know the cause. One theory is that I came in contact with poison ivy, which sounds sort of strange."

YARD SALE

Garage Sale, Patio Sale... whatever term you use, it's an enjoyable and profitable experience. It's your opportunity to "clean up" while you "clean out." You'll become re-acquainted with your neighbors and meet new friends, and the fresh air is good for your health.

Check your attic, basement, garage and closets for good, but no-longer-used items — furniture, tools, ... the list goes on and on. Every item should be priced, of course. You may want to combine your sale with a friend or neighbor. Choose your days, get your signs ready and place your ad in the Classified section. Your ad should list a few key items, give the date, time, and good directions.

A friendly Classified Ad-Visor will help you word your Garage Sale ad for maximum results.
