21 more businesses freed
SAN PEDRO SULA, Honduras - Labor courts have granted more than 200 businesses the right to stop paying for the wages of workers who walked off the job to protest the crisis by the weekend. Wednesday freed 21 workers from 14 businesses, including Pacifico, a major airline company. The freed workers were given 48 hours to return to work before being forced to continue their strike.

Wendy D. H. and her husband, Eric, said the crisis was so serious that they decided it was necessary to free their businesses. "We've never seen the like before," one of the owners said. "We're really happy with the results." The crisis was so serious that the business owners decided to take action.

Not since the royal crisis in the Middle East has there been such a crisis. The royal crisis in the Middle East has been so serious that the business owners decided to take action.

Postal strike

Postal workers have voted to accept a new contract that includes a 2% pay raise. The postal workers, who have been on strike for three weeks, said they were pleased with the new contract.

Oehler overruled in attempt to have civil suit dismissed

Iowa City attorney John Oehler was handed a victory in his attempt to dismiss a civil suit against him. Oehler's motion to dismiss was denied by Judge Joseph P. Considine of the Clinton County District Court.

The ruling is in response to a motion for a change of venue. The plaintiff, Pamela L. Smith, filed a civil suit against Oehler for the allegedtrie of a fraudulent scheme.

Oehler had claimed that the civil suit was filed after he had already settled the case.

"I cannot let a judgment go forward," Considine ruled. "It is in the interest of justice to have this case heard in Clinton County, where the incident took place.""I cannot let a judgment go forward," Considine ruled. "It is in the interest of justice to have this case heard in Clinton County, where the incident took place."

The rule in West Virginia is that the civil suit is brought in the county where the incident took place. Considine ruled that the civil suit was brought in Clinton County, where the incident took place.

Canimation crisis a ‘thing of the past’ with arrival of funds, new buses
By Kristine Stempel

The University of Iowa's (UI) campus crisis was being solved as (UI) president J. Patrick Burns announced new funds were available to help the university. The crisis started last summer when the university faced a severe budget crunch. The university had to cut funding to departments, resulting in the loss of several faculty members.

Burns said the university had received a "substantial" amount of funding from various sources, including the state legislature. He did not disclose the exact amount of funds available.

"We are very grateful for the support we have received,

"Burns said. "This will enable us to continue our commitment to providing a high-quality education for our students."

The university will use the funds to support various programs and initiatives, including the University of Iowa Libraries, which burned in a fire earlier this year.

"This funding will allow us to invest in our libraries and ensure they have the resources they need to support students and faculty," Burns said.

The funding will also help support the university's athletic programs, which have been facing budget cutbacks. Burns said the university will use the funds to support the athletics department and ensure it has the resources it needs to compete at the highest level.

"We are committed to providing our student-athletes with the best possible facilities and equipment," Burns said. "This funding will allow us to invest in our athletic facilities and ensure our student-athletes have the opportunities they need to succeed.

The funding will also support the university's research initiatives. Burns said the university will use the funds to support research projects and ensure faculty have the resources they need to conduct high-quality research.

"We are committed to supporting our faculty in their research efforts," Burns said. "This funding will allow us to invest in our research initiatives and ensure our faculty

Thousands of Britons stop work in support of health employees

LONDON (UPI) — Hundreds of thousands of workers nationwide, in support of the government’s decision Tuesday to grant an 11.5 million-member labor union a 1 percent pay increase, have participated in the largest demonstration against Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in six and a half years of political support for the General Labor Party, the country’s growing unemployment rate.

The walkouts, ranging from 30,000 workers in the coal mines to tens of thousands on the streets, were called by the 11.5 million-member National Union of Public Employees (NUPE) after it announced on the eve of the strikes.

There was no official estimate from any union leaders, but British Broadcasting Corp. television said the demonstration in six and a half years of political party support for the General Labor Party was the biggest union demonstration against Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher since she took office in May 1979.

Lasers may combat heart disease

WASHINGTON (UPI) - A University of California medical researcher has developed a new technique Wednesday that uses laser beams to melt fatty deposits that can narrow arteries and cause heart attacks.

The technique is believed to be a new approach that could be used daily in most hospitals, according to a news conference Wednesday.

Charles E. Sobel, a postdoctoral fellow at the University of California at San Francisco, said it is a little dangerous in some places but appears to be safe in other spots.

Study may quell gallstone debate

The treatments for gallbladder disease are still under debate by the Public Health Institute and the San Francisco Chronicle.

The American College of Gastroenterology says that surgery is the best treatment for gallbladder disease, but some experts say the disease is not a serious enough condition to warrant surgery.

Evans is undecided on FTC bill

By Jeff Buck

Although he has reservations about the FTC, Iowa Sen. Steve Evans was neutral Wednesday in deciding whether to back the Federal Trade Commission. Evans said his concerns about the FTC were similar to those of some of his colleagues, but he decided to vote "no" on the issue, saying that his position was not strong enough to support the bill.

After the passage of the FTC bill, Evans said he would consider supporting a weaker version of the bill. He added that he would like to see more independent review of the FTC's actions.

The bill, which would have created a new FTC, was introduced by Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) and Sen. Pat Roberts (R-Kan.). The bill would have created a new FTC to regulate business practices, including advertising, marketing, and pricing.

Evans said his main concerns were about the FTC's ability to regulate business practices and its potential to infringe on states' rights. He said he was concerned that the FTC could interfere with state consumer protection laws.

McGovern opposition comes out of what they've stepped in and said 'no more' them consumer groups and some businessmen duplicative and expensive. "

Evans, who has been a critic of the FTC in the past, said he believes the agency is too powerful and too bureaucratic. He said he is concerned about the FTC's ability to regulate business practices and its potential to infringe on states' rights.

Evans said he agrees with the FTC's role in regulating business practices, but he is concerned about its potential to infringe on states' rights. He said he is concerned about the FTC's ability to regulate business practices and its potential to infringe on states' rights.

BREA GROUNDS OF ORGANISATION including the FTCs' role in regulating business practices, including the agency's enforcement powers, have been challenged by some. The FTC, in a report last year, said that the agency has been more active in regulating business practices than in enforcing consumer protection laws.

Some senators have called for a weaker version of the bill, saying that the FTC should not be given the power to regulate business practices. Evans said he would consider supporting a weaker version of the bill if it were introduced.

Evans said he would like to see more independent review of the FTC's actions. He said he would like to see more independent review of the FTC's actions. He said he would like to see more independent review of the FTC's actions.

"I'm not sure how many individuals, or even individuals, have ever seen the FTC at work," Evans said. "I think it's time that we have a look at the FTC and see if it's doing a good job."
Shame on Helms

Sen. Jesse Helms, the Carolina Curmudgeon, took it on the chops this week from a number of quarters. For some time, Helms has been making noises that anti-abortion legislation in economic legislation was being used to advance his cause. His floated notion that Helms' Parliament could not break. And this week, he used this to attack the abortion issue in order to rekindle the issue of education. Some people from raising on school-gate cases was held back by another column that the new Helms was out to progressive, as he was supposed to be. Now the myth of Jesse Helms and his early career ended that involved improving the Constitution as vigorously as ever. It is a conservative design that Helms is not working to change the Constitution (yet), but he will be pressed in doing so at the earliest opportunity.

The same failure to get Constitutional amendments through in the U.S. cannot have been an intentional ploy. The trend to the right in the Carter Administration's increasing loosening of legislation is in major ways non-existent, as was apparent on Tuesday, during a number of opt conferences. It is hard to imagine as anyone as zealous in the school property problem wants to see it, or any of the people in any of the states. It is the story that students can not, except in rare cases, be convicted of breaking fire laws, and in any case that children can not be carrying those tiny fire brands. In a few cases, not.

Deja vu

Watching the royal welcome accorded to the dictator of the Philippines, Ferdinand Marcos, as this watching your life pass before your eyes — you know yet you see that many of these squares have around them. The dictator is in trouble because of political repression, torture, corruption, and a worsening economy, concern in America to be handled only against communism. He goes home, having lost an election, but then returning to collect his political forces. He was seen as he was himself, as he is. Deja vu. The citizens are in the street, but the right of students to be free of religious influence in schools is in jeopardy.

The Helms amendments are a waste of Congress' time when considering issues such as poverty of the lower class. As much as Helms has been seen it a number of times. The dictator, Roger Richey, who runs the vast UWSA (and the Panama Canal), is a great admirer of Helms, and in cases of rape and other crimes, Helms' amendments would be introduced.

Harriers to face troubled season
B. Davenport

It's in the nature of the Calderon for this year's team to cross paths with a number of the School's best athletes. The Harriers have long been a source of pride and inspiration for many students.

Since World War II, the Harriers have been a dominant force in the world of track and field. With a roster that includes some of the most talented athletes, the team is poised to make a strong impact on the national scene.

Players begin to show break in ranks

While some athletes are still recovering from injuries, many are already preparing for the upcoming season. The Harriers have a strong nucleus of returning performers, which should make for an exciting campaign.

As the season progresses, look for the Harriers to make a statement in key meets. With a solid foundation of experienced runners, the team is well-positioned to contend for national titles.

Profits are the bottom line of NFL strike

The National Football League and its players are currently embroiled in a bitter dispute over the division of profits. The league's management is demanding increased revenue-sharing agreements, while the players are seeking more control over their earnings.

This contentious period has raised concerns about the viability of the NFL. With the game on the line, fans and stakeholders are closely monitoring the negotiations.

T. Johnson

Sportsview

Two of the nation's best college football teams are set to face off in this weekend's annual Big Ten showdown, with implications for both conference titles and national rankings.

In the first half of the game, the visitors take the lead, 21-14. But in the second half, the home team stages a massive comeback to win, 28-27. The win propels the home team to the top of the league standings, while the visitors fall to second place.

Players begin to show signs of fatigue towards the end of the game, with several key players being benched due to injuries. The home team, however, remains focused and determined, holding off a late rally from the visitors to secure the victory.

The fans were on their feet throughout the game, cheering on their respective teams. The atmosphere was electric, with fans from both sides passionate about their support.

In the end, the home team emerged as the clear winner, demonstrating their dominance and earning the respect of the nation. Their victory not only confirmed their place at the top of the league but also set the stage for a thrilling season ahead.

Losing streak in danger as Wildcats are favored

SWANSON, Tl (711) - Northwestern's hosts Northern Illinois in Saturday's football game, where Iowa is going to be attempting to end its losing streak against rival.

The following:

Northern Illinois may be without its top running back, Kroot Bridges, who was injured in last week's victory over Western Michigan.

Northwestern has no major injuries to report.

The Wildcats have been rated a favorite in this game, but the Iowa State coach hopes for a surprise.

On the line

All right, some of you knuckleheads are waiting for the next minute before they'll buy a ticket for Saturday's game in Wednesday's paper. But the Wildcats have it on their side.

We know the type. The same people who are waiting for the next minute before they'll buy a ticket for Saturday's game

Wildcats have it on their side.

Banks praises Korean baseball

By Matt Sule

The old saying that “it’s a nice place to visit, but I wouldn’t want to live there,” seems to have rung true for Iowa’s Mike Banks.

Banks is back, but not for seven weeks, said the Iowa catcher, who was cut by the Kansas City Royals.

Said Banks, "I’m going to be gone a long time. I don’t think my coaches are going to be happy with me."

The American team, coached by Mike Banks, finished third in the World Cup.

"I’m not sure how my 1983 Hawkeyes will..." Banks believes the Koreans will be a shock if an American team went in a new era. I’d be happy to be back. I’d do anything to help them win.

"It’s a progression from the San Francisco Giants," Banks said, "I’m not sure how my 1983 Hawkeyes will..."

D.O.A. depicts punk contradictions

By Jeffrey Karr

for The Iowa City Press-Citizen

Leif Kwokwash, B.B., arriving at the DuSable Museum with his band, the DuSable 3, earlier this month.

Leif Kwokwash, B.B., arrived at the DuSable Museum with his band, the DuSable 3, earlier this month. The event was sponsored by the museum and the U.S. Department of Education's Office of History and Civil Rights.

The basic problem with D.O.A. is that it gets sidetracked in an attempt to define the punk rock phenomenon. The band members talk at length about how punk rock has influenced their music and lives. However, the film lacks a clear understanding of the punk rock movement as a whole. The result is a disjointed and confusing presentation of the punk rock scene.

MCR RECOMMENDS the following films for anyone interested in punk rock:

Legends to Reach (1984)

This documentary captures the essence of the punk rock movement. It features interviews with punk rockers, as well as footage of punk rock concerts and performances. The film provides a comprehensive overview of the punk rock scene.

God is Good, God Is Love (1989)

This film explores the religious and philosophical beliefs of punk rockers. It offers a unique perspective on the punk rock movement, as it delves into the personal and spiritual lives of the punk rockers.

The Man Who Fell to Earth (1976)

This science fiction film, starring David Bowie, explores the concept of alienation and the punk rock aesthetic. The film's themes and visuals are reminiscent of the punk rock scene.

The Kids (1995)

This documentary, directed by Harmony Korine, follows the lives of young people in post-punk rock culture. It offers a unique glimpse into the world of punk rock.

In conclusion, D.O.A. fails to provide a clear understanding of the punk rock movement as a whole. It is best suited for those who already have a basic knowledge of the punk rock scene.

Writers’ Program

by Carole Wagner

Located in the Daily Iowan

For nearly 20 years, the Writers’ Program in Iowa City, Iowa, has served up something special — a weekly reading series that celebrates the American experience.

The program is a forum for established professional writers, as well as up-and-coming writers.

As he eventually left the room, one writer referred to it as "the writing program of the American heartland.

I will never forget the gift of being able to share my work with others.

Jonathan Kariara, Egyptian writer

Writers from around the world have attended the Writers’ Program in Iowa City.

The program is held on Thursdays at 9 p.m. at the Writers’ Program in Iowa City.

Cults and families compared in ‘Ticket’

by Stephen Saur

Published in the Daily Iowan

The term "cult" is often associated with sinister, secretive organizations that operate outside the bounds of society.

In票‘, a new documentary film directed by Dan Reed, explores the world of cults and their influence on individual and collective beliefs.

The film is a comprehensive look at the hidden world of cults and their impact on society.

Top-secret National Security Agency uncovered in ‘The Puzzle Palace’

by James Kachanoski

Located in the Daily Iowan

The NSA has been a topic of discussion for years, but its true nature and operations have been largely shrouded in secrecy.

The Puzzle Palace is a new documentary film that delves into the inner workings of the NSA.

"The NSA has been a hot topic in recent years, but its inner workings have always remained a mystery," said a spokesperson for the film.

The documentary takes viewers inside the NSA's headquarters, providing a glimpse into the agency's operations and the individuals who work within its ranks.

"It's a film that explores the complex world of the NSA and its impact on society," said the spokesperson.

"Through interviews with former NSA employees and documents obtained through Freedom of Information Act requests, the film provides an inside look at the agency's operations and the role it plays in shaping our world.

The documentary is available now for streaming and on DVD.
