Candiates come to town, talk of jobs

Conlin: My plan is constitutional, will create jobs

By Karen Harvey

lend each nonprofit statistician's prior work, Democrats have allayed some of the fears that the plan might also dissolve some of the quirks in Iowa's insurance system and allow people to shop for their own insurance.

Conlin downplayed the idea, saying

"I'm not sure it's a constitutional issue," he told the audience. "But I'm not sure it's a technical issue either."

Conlin also pointed out that the plan would allow people to shop for their own insurance and would reduce the costs of health care.

The proposal was not overly combative, as Conlin's Republican opponents Terry Branstad and Fred Hubbell were also on hand to discuss their plans for the state. But Conlin's approach was more focused on creating jobs and reducing the costs of health care.

Rozanne Conlin: The American dream has been shattered

EVER THE GOVERNOR is known for being a hands-on leader, the Conlin administration is no exception. At a recent town hall meeting, Conlin highlighted the state's economic growth and discussed the need for continued support from the federal government.

"The American dream has been shattered," Conlin said. "We need to work together to ensure that everyone has the opportunity to achieve their dreams." Conlin highlighted the state's strong economic growth and encouraged everyone to work together to ensure that everyone can benefit from that growth.

Star light, star flight

Spring is here, "Skydance" is in the air. The 20-year-old amateur D.J. Davidovich is ready to express his love for the Grateful Dead. In 1942, he lived on the Iowa frontier with his father, and the family spent many evenings listening to music under the stars.

"I love music and I love to share it with others," Davidovich said. "It's a way to connect with people and express my love for the music that I love."

Davidovich's music is often influenced by the natural world, and he often incorporates nature into his sets. His music is always evolving, and he is always looking for new ways to connect with his audience.

Women protest male violence with park rally

By Tim Evans

About 200 people rallied at College Green Park Saturday night to protest male violence. The rally was organized by the Women's Action Committee and was attended by women and men from across the state.

"We know that male violence is a serious problem," said one of the organizers, "and we are here to show our support for women who are affected by it."

The rally featured speeches by women and men, and it ended with a march through the streets of Iowa City. The march was attended by hundreds of people, and it ended with a rally at the Capitol.

Glen Convendens' coin bond proposal

By Doug Herold

Glen Convendens, a political consultant, has proposed a coin bond proposal that he believes will benefit the Iowa economy.

Convendens' proposal would create a coin that would be used to purchase goods and services in Iowa. The coin would be redeemable for cash at participating businesses, and it would be accepted as payment for goods and services.

Convendens' proposal is supported by many people in Iowa, and it has been endorsed by the Iowa Chamber of Commerce and the Iowa Retail Association.

"We believe that Convendens' proposal will benefit the Iowa economy," said one of the endorsement's authors. "It will provide a new source of revenue for our state, and it will help to create jobs in Iowa."

Convendens' proposal is still in the early stages, and it will take time to implement. However, Convendens is hopeful that his proposal will be successful and that it will benefit the Iowa economy.

City looks for ways to lessen alcohol, bar-related problems

By Mary Lecatoe

The frequency of Iowa City's alcohol-related problems has led Mayor Mary Neuhauser to ask the city attorney to examine state laws and consider the possibility of the city's adopting its own bar-related regulations.

Neuhauser said that she believes the city should look into the possibility of adopting its own bar-related regulations, which would include increasing the number of bar-related events and the fines for violating them.

NFL union vows strike will continue

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The NFL Players Association said Monday it would not back down in its quest for a new labor contract, saying the owners have to back off their position of not negotiating.

"We're not going to back down on our position," said Ron Fournier, executive director of the NFLPA. "We're not going to accept less than what we believe is fair and what we deserve." Fournier is in Cleveland for labor talks with the owners.

The owners have offered to meet with the players but have not made a formal proposal. The players have been asking for an increase in player compensation, a reduction in the number of regular season games, and an end to the lockout policy.

Fournier said the players would not accept anything less than what they believe is fair and what they deserve. He also said the players would not accept anything less than what they believe is fair and what they deserve.

Skilled interior design entrepreneur works toward true craftsmanship

Rita Buju

Business owner Ria Buju believes the difference between starting a business and running a successful one is found in understanding the enemy. She's currently working on a book called "The Enemy Within," which she plans to publish soon. In the meantime, she's focusing on making the world a better place for women artists through her organization, the Women's Caucus.

Buju, a former art teacher, was inspired to start the organization after seeing the struggles women artists face in the art world. She founded the Women's Caucus to provide a platform for women artists to share their work and connect with one another.

Buju's passion for women's rights and art led her to create the organization. She believes that by working together, women artists can improve their chances of success.

"Women artists can improve their chances of success by joining forces," Buju said.

Buju's organization has helped women artists gain exposure, network, and collaborate on projects. They've also held workshops and seminars to help women artists develop their skills.

"The Women's Caucus is here to support women artists and help them achieve their goals," Buju said.

Buju's dedication to the cause is evident in her work. She spends countless hours running the organization, organizing events, and speaking to groups about the importance of women in art.

"I'm proud of what we've accomplished so far," Buju said. "But there's still so much more we can do."

Buju's message is clear: women artists can band together to create a brighter future for themselves and the art world.

Old success saves lifeless opera

By Lisa Norton

"Iowa," the 1845 musical that never was, was not supposed to make it to the stage. Now, 150 years later, Des Moines native Randy Brown is taking on the role that his father, Warren Brown, did not get to play.

"It's a story of mistaken identity. The story of how he wanted a daughter, but instead got a son. I've been with the group since college," Randy Brown said.

"Iowa," a piece by French composer Jacques Offenbach, was a failure in its day. Brown, however, is being given the chance to revive it.

"It's an incredible display of drive and passion the composer had. It's very interesting to see what he was able to do in a short amount of time," Brown said.

The opera was first performed in 1845, and has never been performed in Des Moines before. Brown and the group are working to bring the opera to life, with a special focus on the Des Moines native.

"We're bringing it to Des Moines because it's a Des Moines story," Brown said. "I want to make sure that people here know about it and appreciate it."

"Iowa" is just one of the many shows that Brown has been a part of. He is also a member of the group "The Secret," which is presenting "The Secret of the Old Opera House." The show is a send-up of classical music and manners.

"We're bringing in some humor and fun to the classical music scene," Brown said. "We're trying to show that classical music can be fun and entertaining."
