Ministers will stay 18 months

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Presi dent Reagan reiterated Tuesday in a long-sought con cession that he would stay in office for two years in defer tence to his Democratic opponents in Congress.

The president's announcement came as the Republican-led Congress voted to extend the administration's term in office. The move is expected to be passed by the Senate this week.

"I will not run for re-election," Reagan said during a press conference. "I believe that two years is enough for a president to serve."

The announcement, which caps a week of political intrigue, could have serious implications for the upcoming midterm elections. The Republican Party is expected to make significant gains in the House and Senate.

Reagan's decision to terminate his presidency early could also set a precedent for future presidents, raising concerns about the potential for a "lame-duck" period following an election.

The announcement comes as the country faces a range of domestic and international challenges, including the ongoing Iran-Contra affair and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The president's move is likely to be met with mixed reactions, with some praising his decision while others criticize his early departure.

Three more join field in council race

By Carlos Tomas

Three new City council candidates will join the fray in the upcoming election.

The council is expected to hold a preliminary hearing on the candidates' qualifications on Tuesday, with a final vote likely to take place in November.

The candidates include a lawyer, a former city employee, and a real estate developer. All three have expressed interest in running for the council, which currently has three open seats.

The candidates will be interviewed by the City Council, and the interview process is expected to take several weeks.

The council's decision is likely to be met with a mix of reactions, with some praising the candidates' qualifications while others criticize the council's decision-making process.

Embassy residence is shelved in Beirut

BEIRUT (UPI) — U.S. aid officials shelved plans Monday for a $2 million embassy residence in Beirut, according to sources.

The embassy had been expected to begin construction next month.

The decision was reportedly made due to security concerns in Lebanon, where the embassy had previously been the target of terrorist attacks.

The embassy had been expected to include a mansion, a swimming pool, and a gym.

The move comes as the U.S. government continues to evaluate its security measures in the region.

Wrestling camp policies under investigation

by Kirk Brown

An incident involving the physical abuse of a wrestler at the University of Iowa wrestling camp is under investigation.

The incident occurred during a practice session last week. Witnesses say a coach was seen physically abusing a wrestler, who later complained of injuries.

The incident is being investigated by university officials, and the coach involved has been suspended pending an investigation.

The University of Iowa wrestling team has a long history of high-level success, with multiple national championships and Olympic gold medals.

The university has a strong commitment to ensuring a safe and respectful environment for its student-athletes. The investigation will be thorough, and appropriate action will be taken.

The university has reached out to the affected wrestler and is providing support as needed.

Plan eyed to check commission budgets

By Dan Hauser

The Iowa City council is considering a plan to check the budgets of its new public commissions.

The idea is to require each commission to submit a report on its activities and expenses to the council on a quarterly basis.

The council hopes to use the information to ensure that the commissions are operating efficiently and within their budget constraints.

The idea is similar to what is done in some other cities, where commissions are required to submit detailed reports on their activities and finances.

The council is expected to vote on the proposal at its next meeting.

Panel scraps plans to allow wine sales

DES MOINES (AP) — The Iowa City city council on Monday night voted to allow private sale of wine and agreed the state should remain the only legal wholesale outlet for all alcoholic beverages.

The decision came as the first step toward implementing a state-sponsored plan to allow private sale of wine in grocery stores and gas stations.

Mayor David Swink said the committee worked for more than a year to find the right solution for private wine sales. He said the councilors agreed to allow the state to develop a plan for private wine sales, but the state should remain the only wholesale outlet for all alcoholic beverages.

The plan would allow private wine sales in grocery stores and gas stations, but the state would remain the only wholesale outlet for all alcoholic beverages. The state would still be responsible for regulating the sale of wine.

The decision came after a day of testimony from both supporters and opponents of the plan. Supporters said the plan would help the state's budget and create jobs, while opponents said it would put too much power in the hands of the state.

New anti-satellite weapons included in Pentagon plan to boost defense

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25—The Pentagon plans to boost U.S. military potential in the Pacific theater by buying $15 million anti-satellite weapons systems and other hardware to boost the nation's defenses against threats from nuclear war.

Under the plan, the Pentagon would purchase four anti-satellite missile systems, each costing $3.75 million, and would add an additional four systems to the list of items in development. The systems would be designed to intercept and destroy satellites that could be used for military purposes.

The plan also calls for the purchase of four anti-ship missile systems, each costing $2.5 million, and would add an additional four systems to the list of items in development. The systems would be designed to destroy ships that could be used for military purposes.

The Pentagon said the plan would enhance the nation's ability to defend against threats from nuclear war, and to protect the nation's strategic interests.

The plan is expected to be announced by Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld, who is expected to discuss the matter at a news conference on Oct. 26.

The plan has been criticized by some military experts, who say it is too expensive and too risky to implement.

Subsidies needed

As the American Telephone and Telegraph divestiture approaches completion, it affects on consumers are becoming gradually apparent. The customization of the new companies’ rates is based on various factors, including the local market price, the average cost of providing service, and the economic conditions of the area.

Before the breakup, AT&T provided both long-distance and local service. Now, separate companies handle these services, allowing local companies to consider the external costs of providing local service. But now the local companies are their own in the local calling market — the result is higher prices.

Our local company, NorthernTel, announced recently that instead of charging a flat monthly rate for local calling, it would begin to charge customers a per-call basis. It estimates that this will save the average consumer $500 per month.

Add to the “access fees” the “structured access” (with long-distance carriers) recently imposed by the Federal Communications Commission that will increase from $100 to $500 in 1984, and the average local phone bill becomes nearly $200.

Analysis suggests that if prices are going to make up for the increased local costs, they must be added to the local rate, not to the long-distance rate. This is because they demonstrate a change in the way the market is working.

In the past, when the market was competitive, the companies could change the rates to the consumer in order to compete. Now, with the lack of competition, the companies can charge the consumer more for the same service.

Only large businesses create enough long-distance volume to offset the increase in local costs, not consumers who “touch” service and are related on a fixed basis. And much of the long-distance distance is not yet to be evaluated. Although consumers like Teleconferencing and MCI are offering significantly reduced rates, AT&T is demanding each local market share of all long-distance business that it is so easy to curtail. Expected reduction in AT&T’s rates have decreased from 15 percent to under 10 percent. As long as AT&T is able to maintain its prices, it is competitive in increasing their prices.

Now that Teleconferencing has given access equal to long-distance lines, they need not price so drastically to attract business away from AT&T.

Nuclear quandary in the year 2083

By Allen Murray

TUESDAY BACK A moment.

Turn back a moment to the time when the author of The Underground War, before the Korean conflict, wrote about the Great Depression. Before that, in 1938, the New Deal was moving toward a large-scale effort to establish a “debt of national recovery”.

What if, in 2003, our government had decided to build nuclear power plants? What if, after 1982, when television and radio started to broadcast the nuclear explosion over thelite death, our government had created a nuclear power plant?

“Why do I keep putting this off? I think it’s time. I don’t want to worry about it any longer. I’ll just have to do it.”

ANALYSIS

The author suggests that the government should consider building nuclear power plants as an alternative to the current energy crisis. He feels that the government has been putting off the decision for too long and that it is time to take action.

The author also mentions that the government should consider the long-term effects of nuclear power plants on the environment and society. He believes that it is important to consider these effects before making a decision.

The author concludes by saying that the government should take action to build nuclear power plants and that it is time to start thinking about the future of energy in the United States.

Challenges await Iowa women

Corning surprised the Hawkeyes that the team has a great distance runner, so what we have to do is run a group of people who are no more than 30 or 40 meters apart on the first lap. The Hawkeyes have that ability to pull seven or eight runners in on the first lap. The 45-yard position Tuesday, the team has been working on its system for a long time. When the player has the 'node' system, it will be functional. When the Hawkeyes have that ability, the head coach made a mistake in the steps. Smaller women should be used in this situation. They are still working on the coaching staff. The position is to develop a system where we can develop a system where we can develop a system. The coaching staff is developing a system. But that was a good practice in the coaching staff.
Iowa's ment's came to a close last weekend. The tournament, which was held on Saturday, featured 10 teams, and the Hawkeyes finished third place.

"We view this weekend as a team before the tournament, " said Coach Ken Green. "It was a good week for us because we had experience in the final." The Hawkeyes defeated Delta Tau Delta in the final game, 15-12, 5-15, and were declared the champions of the men's division.

Comparing the Hawkeyes to a national team, Coach Green said, "We have a lot of potential, but we need to work on our consistency. We have a very good team, but we need to play better together." The Hawkeyes are now looking forward to the women's division tournament, which will be held in two weeks.

The Hawkeyes lost to Delta Sigma Delta in the first division in the Big Ten this season, but Coach Green said, "We have had a lot of injuries this season, and we have not been able to play at our best. But we are looking forward to the women's division tournament."
Wellering accumulates wins

By Brad Zimmerman

John Wellering, a school teacher from Crete, Neb., has in recent years been more than a high school teacher, more than a coach. He has been a record-setter in the Triple Jump.

In the long jump, Wellering won his first national meet title this year. He put in a fine effort in the Triple Jump at the National High School Meet in Greensboro, N.C., and the following day, broke the national record.

Wellering is a native of Crete, Neb., and has been teaching in the public schools for the past ten or twelve years. He is a graduate of Crete High School, and has served as principal of the school for the last five years.

The well-known athlete is now preparing for the national meet in the Triple Jump, in which he will be defending his title. Wellering has been practicing hard, and is confident of a good showing in Greensboro.

Wellering is also a member of the Crete High School track team, and has been very successful in that sport. He has broken several records in the Triple Jump, and has won many other events.

The Atlanta Braves, who completed their home stand with an 82:4 record, moved into first place in the National League East with a three-run fourth inning and doubled home a seventh-inning run when Ron Clark, the game winner, scored on a wild pitch by Bob Buhl, who had just given up a two-run lead in the inning. The Braves' lead over the San Diego Padres was now 51 games.

Morgan, who was tied with Rees for the NL lead, went 1-for-3 and finished the season with 105 RBIs. He led off the inning with a single, advanced to second on a wild pitch, and scored on a single by George Frazier. The Braves' lead over the San Diego Padres was now 51 games.

The Philadelphia Veterans, who beat the Chicago Cubs 10-8 in 13 innings, scored three runs in the first inning when Ron Clark, the game winner, scored on a wild pitch by Bob Buhl, who had just given up a two-run lead in the inning. The Braves' lead over the San Diego Padres was now 51 games.

The Cubs, who had a two-game lead in the National League East, scored three runs in the first inning when Ron Clark, the game winner, scored on a wild pitch by Bob Buhl, who had just given up a two-run lead in the inning. The Braves' lead over the San Diego Padres was now 51 games.

The St. Louis Cardinals, who had a two-game lead in the National League Central, scored three runs in the first inning when Ron Clark, the game winner, scored on a wild pitch by Bob Buhl, who had just given up a two-run lead in the inning. Nam brought meaning to insanity; Wright's new novel gives it words

Author Raymond Carver's wisest contributions are his brief and to the point variations of short stories, calligraphy, which pare down the lines and layers of many examples.

Books

The structure of Wright's novel is not immediately clear. Readers who seek short descriptions of events or characters may be disappointed by the brevity of the narrative. However, the reader who appreciates the ornate style and philosophical musings of the novel will be rewarded with a profound exploration of the human condition.

The structure of Words's novel is in-\[\]s, utilizing flashbacks, memories, and abrupt transitions. As part of this novelistic technique, Words provides insight into the protagonist's mind. In doing so, Words's protagonist, George, is depicted as a complex character with layers of inner conflict and self-discovery. Words's use of such a narrative technique allows for a deeper exploration of the protagonist's psychological journey. This novel serves as a testament to Words's skillful crafting of a compelling story, one that resonates with readers through its exploration of the human condition.
Parker moves closer to ‘success’, but old fans will be disappointed

The rock scene of the mid-'70s, has been hailed as his. He's got a lot to say, and he doesn't waste any time talking about it. He's highly acclaimed, direct, often brilliant. His talents have led him down a road of rancorous. Devoto is a bitter, blind, and ultimately suc...
I found the focus of my own decision-making process in this regard was to think about what Brecht wanted the audience to experience. There were a few things that I thought were important to consider: that the audience should not identify with the main character, Polly. This is because the audience is meant to draw certain conclusions from the play, and identifying with the main character would undermine this. Additionally, I thought it was important to consider the historical context of the play, as it was written during a time of great economic concerns. This gives us a sense of the social issues that the play is addressing. Finally, I thought it was important to consider the audience's potential reaction to the play. If the audience identifies with Polly, they might be more likely to accept the play's message, which is that social issues cannot be ignored.

I also thought about the role of the theater in society. Theater is a form of communication, and it has the power to influence people's thoughts and actions. For me, it was important to think about how I could use this power to make a difference. I wanted to create a production that would make people think about social issues, and that would challenge them to take action.

In the end, I decided to focus on the emotional aspects of the play. I wanted to capture the audience's attention through powerful storytelling and dramatic performances. I also thought about how to use the physical space of the theater to create a sense of intimacy and connection between the audience and the performers. I worked with the designers to create a visually stunning production that would engage the audience from the start. I also made sure to create a strong sense of community among the performers, so that they could work together to create a cohesive performance.

Through all of these considerations, I hope to create a production that will make people think, challenge them to take action, and leave them with a sense of hope and possibility. I believe that theater has the power to make a difference, and I am committed to using this power to create a better world.
