Evans vows help for audited UI students

By Rachel Drige

About 30 UI graduate students, upset about recent Internal Revenue Service auditing of their income, have come forward to react to the actions of their college's tax adviser.

"I'm just really mad," said one graduate student. "It's just like they're trying to put us in aCatchsighl with their returns." He explained that he and his colleagues had been audited by the IRS in the past year. They say their stapled paychecks did not show up on the university's financial statements.

The problem of interpretation comes when graduate students have to make decisions about where to invest their financial aid. Some studies have shown that graduate students are more likely to invest their aid in tuition and fees. However, the university has not released any official statement on the matter.

Coup in Panama is charged

PANAMA CITY, Panama - After the military junta took power in Panama last week, further signs of military strength were shown yesterday. The junta has taken over major government offices and is said to be planning to install a new president.

A #140 in Panama City yesterday described the situation as "critical." He said the junta was in control of the main government buildings and that he had seen people wearing military uniforms.

Reagan, Mubarak hold talks

WASHINGTON - President Reagan and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat met to discuss ways to improve relations between the two countries.

Sadat said he was "optimistic" that the meeting would lead to a "new era of peace and stability." Reagan expressed hope that the talks would "clear the way for a lasting solution to the Middle East conflict."

UI seeks special waste permit

By Bill Broom

UI officials are confident legislation currently introduced in the Iowa House will pass. The proposal, being pushed by the Iowa State University Student Council, would provide a mechanism for the university to manage hazardous waste.

If passed, the proposed legislation would provide for special waste permits for both hazardous waste treatment and disposal facilities. The permits would be issued by the state environmental health and safety office, which would review each facility's application.

The university, located in the heart of the nation's largest hazardous waste disposal area, has long been aware of the need for a special permit to manage its waste. "We realized what the law said, explained William Farrell, UI director of the university's hazardous waste and disposal facility. "It was clear the UI was operating in hazardous waste territory.

"But we had to find that facility a cost could easily exceed hundreds of thousands of dollars."

According to Farrell, in addition to the costs of establishing and maintaining a hazardous waste facility, the university would have to pay for the special permit. This fee would be based on the proposed annual cost of the permit, and would be assessed to the university. Farrell noted that UI would probably seek a reimbursement for the permit cost.

Farrell said the UI would also consider the "economic factor" in the law's language. The confidence in the university's ability to manage hazardous waste is based on the recommendation of the UI's hazardous waste management committee. The committee is comprised of UI faculty members, UI staff members, and representatives from the Iowa State University's Office of Environmental Health.

The university has been working with the committee to develop a plan for managing hazardous waste. The plan includes the construction of a new hazardous waste storage facility, the development of procedures for handling hazardous waste, and the establishment of a hazardous waste management committee. The committee will be responsible for overseeing the implementation of the plan and for monitoring the university's progress in managing hazardous waste.

The university is currently working with the committee to develop a budget for the proposed plan. The budget will include the cost of establishing and maintaining the hazardous waste facility, the cost of the special permit, and the costs of managing hazardous waste.

Farrell said that the university is optimistic about the prospects for passage of the proposed legislation. The university has been working with the committee to develop a plan for managing hazardous waste, and the university is confident that the plan will be successful.

Grants for academic affairs, she said, are one exception. Two weeks ago, a cancer-related research at the UI Bake, suggested UI president's inaction in their pursuit of federal funds for research. However, they say that the UI's annual travel budget for next year will be revised by 2.8 percent.

Iowa's travel budget is set at $180 per year for faculty travel. Terry Branstad's recommended budget will be subject to the annual review of the UI's operating budget, which Gov. Terry Branstad has recommended. According to the UI vice president, the travel budget for next year will be revised by 2.8 percent.

Busiربية the level of travel expenses, the University of Iowa's travel budget for next year will be revised by 2.8 percent.

GRANT WOOD school honors its namesake

Grant Wood, the namesake of Grant Wood Elementary School, is being celebrated for his birthday on Wednesday, February 17th. The school is holding a special event to honor the famous painter, who is known for his farming scenes and his signature style.

The event will feature a presentation on Grant Wood's life and work, as well as a display of some of the school's art students' work inspired by his paintings. The school is also encouraging students to wear their favorite Grant Wood-inspired outfits.

In addition to the event, the school will be holding a special section of art classes focusing on Grant Wood's work. Students will be learning about his techniques and styles, and will be encouraged to create their own Grant Wood-inspired pieces of art.

Grant Wood Elementary School is located at 2730 25th Street, Iowa City, IA 52245. For more information, please contact 338-9775.

Decline and ...

When an institution or social structure "dies" it does not just collapse in a cloud of dust — that would be needlessly simple. Rather, it breaks down in increments over time. It hastens and prepares the people involved to accommodate itself to a new situation. If the latter is not possible, it ceases to function. Whether the EU started with a higher education system that can be said to have in its way collapsed is debatable, but certainly they are now in some state of decline.

In accounting for the EU's budget woes, a state budget hunter by his own estimate apparently is where the buck stops for the time being. Week sauce, dominated by reassuring actors,Hurts college in all departments — as it does to afford, not something but hard-earned forces to come. Without its ideological mission, will these who will bear the least of the casualties of the EU be able to mount anything like the opposition and unified resistance mobilized by columnist Hoyt Oelsen in an article on this page.

When the average citizen buys a product, from a toaster to a car, as an important aspect of that purchase is the warranty. The manufacturer wishes to promise that the product will perform as specified for a reasonable length of time, and if it doesn't perform, will replace or repair the product. This warranty is possible for the consumer, considering that even tinkerers can cost a fair amount of money. It is even more possible for the consumer, considering that as far as it is reasonable, in effect, is expect a professional to get it right. As a professional, it is expected that the professionals have been trained in the field of work.

The warranty is important because it allows the consumer to be assured that if something goes wrong, the manufacturer will be held accountable for the product. The manufacturer is responsible for any defects in the product and any damages caused by the defects.

The lawyers for the union and others who oppose the warranty provision now in court argue that such provisions are unnecessary and unenforceable.

But the facts behind these arguments are inaccurate and self-serving. Companies need to look for the benefits and recognize the importance of the warranty. They provide warranties for commercial aircraft, automobile manufacturers, and even the space shuttle. European manufacturers guarantee the products they sell to the North American market, the aerospace industry, and other industries. The warranty is an important part of the overall product and is expected by consumers.

Cranston backers launch final effort

By John Flan

With the Iowa primary season less than a week away, backers of Sen. Alan Cranston's presidential campaign, along with local politicians, are urging support to a candidate who they believe can capture the Iowa vote.

The Cranston campaign is hitting Iowa in Owatonna, a suburb of Des Moines, this week. Campaign officials said they believe they can capture the Iowa vote.

The Cranston campaign has already begun making advertising television commercials, which are expected to reach Iowa television audiences on Wednesday.

A Cranston campaign spokesman said the campaign is committed to campaigning in Iowa and other key states in the region.

Cranston's campaign has been a major player in the Iowa caucuses for many years, and the candidate has won in Iowa in the past.

Cranston, who is a Democrat, is running for the Democratic nomination for president. He is facing a tough race against several other Democratic candidates, including Hillary Clinton, Joe Biden, and Bernie Sanders.

The Cranston campaign has been working to build a strong grassroots organization in Iowa, and they are hoping to build on that momentum in the coming weeks.

The Cranston campaign is also working to build a strong online presence, with a robust presence on social media platforms.

The Cranston campaign has been working to build a strong network of volunteers in Iowa, and they are hoping to build on that momentum in the coming weeks.

The Cranston campaign has been working to build a strong financial base, with a strong fundraising operation.

Cagers do double time to build ‘mental toughness’

By Thomas W. Jorgs

It’s a bad-dish effort to improve the emotional ‘toughness’ of the players. Last basketball Coach George Hardwick at the University of Wisconsin said that to improve the team’s skills, the players needed to make six points during the season, with an aggressive defense at the end of the year.

So far, Wisconsin has done more of what was expected. The team has scored 35 points against the Big Ten, and in the first half of the season, the team has scored 48 points against the Big Ten.

The team’s performance will continue to be monitored. Valuing the game, the team is making equal pay scale for marathoners draws attention of racing experts

Shall men and women runners receive equal pay rate for their distance running?

That is the question posed to Jim Frye in this week's edition of Fort Wayne's WNDU-4 TV. Frye is the assistant sports editor for the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette. He has also run the New York City Marathon and owns a home in Indiana. His interest in the issue stems from Frye's own experience as a runner. In the past, Frye has advocated for equal pay for women runners, and has been vocal in his support of the issue.

In the article, Frye quotes Tom Zamoylek, a former top-flight marathoner who has run in several major international events. Zamoylek expresses concern about the unequal pay scales for men and women runners. He suggests that there may be a lack of awareness about the issue, and that it is time for the sport to address it.

The article goes on to mention the case of Jenny Spangler, an accomplished female runner who recently set a new world record in a shorter distance race. Spangler's achievements have brought attention to the issue of equal pay for women runners, and Frye believes that this is a good example of how changes can be made.

Overall, the article is a call to action for change, and suggests that the sport of distance running needs to address the issue of equal pay for men and women runners. It highlights the need for awareness and action, and suggests that there is a growing movement towards greater equality in pay for distance runners.
NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Even in defeat, North Carolina's Leslie Robinson had her moments last night.

The Tar Heels dropped a 98-82 decision to the Ohio State Buckeyes in the semifinals of the NCAA's National Basketball Tournament. The Buckeyes move on to the title game, while the Tar Heels likely face a fourth-place consolation game tomorrow. Robinson scored 26 points for the Tar Heels, but it wasn't enough to lift them past the Buckeyes.

"It's disappointing to lose," Robinson said after the game. "But we gave it our best shot and we're proud of each other. We played well and we'll be back next year."

Look out, Pete: Simon is hot on your rock ‘n’ roll trail

By Alba Fyntas

Simon Townshend has had to risk any number of titles that people get into rock & roll night balls and had Ammon’s work been excellent, it might be of some exchange. It doesn’t mean that Simon’s work is a failure of rock quality. It’s just that it has been riskier and riskier with the years. It’s just that it has been riskier and riskier with the years. Well, I still walk a little bit about the wrong things. The idea is to be able to take a walk about and be able to take a walk about and be able to take a walk about and be able to take a walk about and be able to take a walk about and be able to take a walk about.

Simon’s Sweet Downs L.P. is just a little too much. I still walk a little about the wrong things.

Pete’s priorities are straight: he’s out to rock you.

Townshend’s priorities are straight: he’s out to rock you.
