Corporation formed to lure industry to Iowa City

By Duane Heiser

As big-city mayor, Gary Hart has promised to attract business to Iowa City. But to Mayor Donald Paulson, it's just another promise.

"I think there's a lot of people who just promise things like that," Paulson said. "I'm not sure how many have been carried out."

Paulson said he's not sure whether his city's new Industry Development Corporation will be more successful in attracting business than the one Hart helped create in Washington, D.C.

"I think it's a little bit of wishful thinking," he said. But Paulson added that it's not necessarily a bad idea. "I'm not sure how much help we could do, but it's worth a try."

The Industry Development Corporation was created by the Iowa City Council last month to try to lure businesses to the city. It will have a budget of $50,000, including $10,000 from the City of Iowa City, $10,000 from the State of Iowa, and $30,000 from an Iowa City businessman.

The corporation will be headed by a three-member board of directors, each representing a different industry. The board will be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by the City Council.

The corporation will be responsible for marketing Iowa City to businesses and for providing information to businesses about the city's attractions.

The corporation will also be responsible for developing a business plan and for setting goals for the city's economic development.

The corporation will be housed in the old City Hall building, which is currently being renovated.

The corporation will be funded by a combination of federal, state, and local government grants, as well as private donations.

Beer garden permit requests up

By Jeff Ellerbett

Several Iowa City restaurants and bars have applied for "outdoor service permits," allowing them to serve liquor and food outside. As of Wednesday, the City Council had yet to vote on any such permits. The council may take up the permits at its regular meeting tonight.

"It's an important step. The people who have applied for permits have held outdoor service areas for some time, and this will give them some stability," said Matt Congdon, a naturalist who has worked with the Iowa City Council on the issue. Congdon added that he is impressed by the speed with which the permits have been applied for.

The council is expected to vote on the permits tonight, and if approved, they will go into effect next month. The permits will allow restaurants and bars to serve liquor and food outside, as long as the weather permits.

Congdon said that the permits are a "win-win" situation for both the restaurants and the city. "It's a great opportunity for the restaurants to expand their business and for the city to have more outdoor spaces," he said.

The permits will also help the city to better regulate outdoor service areas, Congdon said. "We need to have some sort of regulations in place to ensure that outdoor service areas are safe and well-maintained," he said.

The council will also consider the permits at its next meeting, which is scheduled for the first Tuesday of each month. Congdon said that he is looking forward to seeing how the permits will be implemented.

UI security laments low salaries

By Rose Rosenberg

"I'll always remember my first day of work at the university," says security officer J. David Randall. "I was in the building when the election was held on campus." November 1, 1982, was the day that Randall, a poet, journalist, and university employee, was first introduced to the world of university security. "I was hired to patrol the campus and keep an eye on things," he recalls. "I'm still doing it today." Randall vividly remembers the early days of his career at the university. "There were times when I would be the only security officer on duty," he says. "But those days are long gone." Randall's current responsibilities include overseeing the university's security department, which has grown from a small staff of two to a team of over 50 officers. "We've come a long way," he says. "But there's still a lot of work to be done."
Rally recalls Three Mile accident

By Susan Fager - Features

A handful of teachers and students joined in the protest at downtown Iowa City's West High School Monday afternoon as part of a national day of action. The event was held to mark the third anniversary of the Three Mile Island nuclear accident.

The demonstration was organized through a coalition of community groups and teachers. The protest was called to draw attention to the nuclear power plant at Three Mile Island, to end the use of nuclear energy, and to support the rights of workers who lost their jobs as a result of the accident.

The rally included a march from the school to the West High School, where the majority of the crowd gathered. The march was led by the Iowa City teachers union and the Iowa City Federation of Teachers.

The event was organized by Teach, Labor, and the Iowa City Federation of Teachers. The rally was held to call attention to the dangers of nuclear power and the need for alternatives to nuclear energy.

Local man charged with second-degree theft

By Patricia Reicher - News

William Frank Schreiber, 31, 614 S. Grand St., was arrested Wednesday with an Iowa County District Court warrant.

According to an Iowa City police press release, Schreiber's arrest was the result of an investigation into an alleged scheme to defraud opponents of the proposed Gateway Mall.

Schreiber was charged with first-degree theft, a class C felony, and first-degree theft, a class D felony.

Schreiber is scheduled to appear in court on March 29 at 10 a.m.

UI human rights award has no winner this year

By Catherine Kehr

The Philip Hubbard Human Rights Award, which in the past has carried a prize of $250, remained unawarded this year. The award committee decided Wednesday to retain the two names it considered for the two nominees. The invitation to nominate was sent to selected administrators and department heads as well as to student centers, such as the Academic Center, the Abrahamsson and the Chinese-American cultural centers.

"If the means that have ked very effective in human rights this year, there have been few instances of discrimination or injustice," he said. "I think the committee decided to keep the names pending a similar amount of circumstances in the past."

Foreign policy politics

During an election year, voters can expect politicians to pander to an over a certain amount of false, irrelevant issues aimed at getting attention away from the real, pressing problems facing the country. It's important that we support our leaders and their priorities. If we don't, they might lose an election.

Of course, we can't vote for a candidate just because they support the Jewish vote (the president is against moving the embassy). There are so many other more important things to debate.

Salvador elections began long road

Election trends

The first round of elections in El Salvador are over and, despite efforts by the guerrillas to sabotage the process and introduce a number of polling places, the results were relatively free of violence.

It is impossible for a country in the midst of a war, with thousands dead and wounded, with the endemic poverty that historical government death squads and with major problems of resource allocation and infrastructure. Nevertheless, it is imperative to try and begin the process of democratic elections, but this requires that there are elections there. The problems there. The electorate does not reelect the landowners, who were the main beneficiaries of the elections.

The solution is to establish a new political system that is fair and just, and that provides the means for the people to elect their representatives and have their voices heard in the future. This will be a long and difficult process, but it is essential for the development of El Salvador and its future.

The United States must be unambiguous. It must make the argument that, in order to go to El Salvador without relevant presidential support, such a system must be established in the short term.

Some suggested that they should help the people of El Salvador with their democratic development. The United States has made clear that it supports and, indeed, applauds, the peace process in El Salvador.

At the same time, it has declined to reelect the government with the process in the region. If El Salvador is to become a democratic state, there will be increased pressure. Because it has been a United Nations' fail.

Letters

Priority problems

To the Editor:

As a veteran, I was disappointed when reading the latest of the U.S. government's efforts to promote democracy in El Salvador. While I applaud the efforts of the government, I believe that a more focused approach is needed.

Countries in need of democracy will be more willing to accept them if they are presented with a clear and consistent message. We need to be vocal about the importance of democracy and freedom, and we need to work with the international community to ensure that our efforts are successful.

I urge the government to continue its efforts to promote democracy in El Salvador. With a steady and consistent message, we can make significant progress.

The United States is committed to supporting El Salvador's path to democracy. We will continue to work with the government and the international community to ensure that El Salvador achieves a stable and democratic future.
New Nebrilishurth directed at civilians

The Nebrilishurths, a Christian militia of the Jim Crow era, began to attack civilians in southern Sudan in May 1994. The group, led by a former military officer named Boko Haram, began to target civilian populations in the region, leading to widespread fear and displacement. The conflict escalated quickly, with both the government forces and Boko Haram engaging in aggressive tactics.

Boko Haram, led by a charismatic leader named Abubakar Shekau, sought to establish control over the region, targeting not only the civilian population but also foreign aid workers and peacekeepers. The group's tactics included.bi- zarre attacks and suicide bombings, terrorizing the populace and disrupting humanitarian efforts.

The conflict in Nebrilis continued to escalate, with both sides committing atrocities and using civilians as human shields. The United Nations and several donor countries attempted to mediate the conflict, but progress was slow and the situation remained tense. The conflict in Nebrilis is a stark reminder of the enduring violence in parts of Africa, where civil wars have raged for decades, leaving a trail of destruction and suffering in their wake.

Ohio State State’s Chesbro is fired for failure to win an NCAA crown

STILLWATER, Okla. (UPI) - Oklahoma State athletic director Davey Bordanet, in the most difficult position he's ever been in, has accepted the resignation of Oklahoma State basketball coach Eddie Chesbro on Monday. Bordanet's decision came after a week of rumors that Chesbro was about to be fired. Bordanet was quoted as saying: "This was the most difficult decision I've ever made," he said at a news conference, "but it's the right one." Chesbro, who has been the head coach of the basketball team since 1983, was dismissed with three games remaining in the season. The Cowboys finished the season with a record of 13-15. Chesbro's team was the national champion in 1985, and he has guided the team to 18 NCAA tournament appearances. Chesbro was a two-time All-American himself and played for Coach John Wooden at UCLA. Chesbro has been head coach of the basketball team since 1983. The Cowboys finished the season with a record of 13-15.

"In the end, we just felt that it was time to make a change," Bordanet said. "It's a difficult decision, but it's the right decision for the program." Express’ signing of Young a part of USFL’s ‘fantasy’

While Los Angeles Express of the United States Football League announced last week that quarterback Young would sign a contract with them, they also took another step towards what they call their 1984 season's ‘fantasy’ on October 8 when they announced that they had signed Young for $3.35 million and $3.50 million per season respectively.

Young has been a hot topic in the USFL for the past year, as his signing with Los Angeles has generated a lot of attention. The team has set aside $3.35 million and $3.50 million per season for Young, which is a significant investment in a sport that is still in its infancy.

Express' signing of Young is a part of USFL's 'fantasy' approach to the sport, which has been highlighted in recent years. Young's signing is expected to attract more fans to the league and boost its popularity.

The team's decision to sign Young for such a high salary is not surprising, as the USFL is trying to create a hype around the sport and make it more appealing to the public. Young's signing is a significant step towards achieving this goal.

However, the USFL's financial stability is still in question, and the team's decision to sign Young for such a high salary could have implications for the league's future. It will be interesting to see how the USFL's financial health holds up in the coming years, considering the high salary paid to Young.

Iowa State names Miami's Wettig to coach women's basketball squad

AMES (IUP) — Miami of Ohio women's basketball Coach Pam Wettig was named women's basketball coach at Iowa State University, Cyclone officials announced Wednesday.

Wettig, who has been women's basketball coach at the Mount, Ohio, school for seven seasons and guided the Lady Redkites to a 1-3 record last season, replaces in-season interim coach Sonja Hylton.

"This is tremendous opportunity," Wettig said after meeting her players and assistants Wednesday night. "I am extremely grateful to the Cyclones for giving me the opportunity to start a new program. This is a great program. This is a great group of players. I have a great feeling. I am very forward looking."

"I am confident that there is no other place in the country that you think of women's basketball and think of Iowa State," Wettig continued. The tradition and support for girls' athletics is the best in the nation, she added.

"I am excited to be a part of this institution's biggest cities and about the opportunity to get back to my home state," Wettig said. "I am excited to be a part of the Cyclones, and I am excited to be part of a program that is established." The cross country "is well-established."

"The torch will be lit in the Greek village of Olympia and carried to head to Athens, in the shadow of the ancient stadium built by King Pelops for the first Olympic Games. The relay will begin in Athens and cross the country, stopping off in the nation's biggest cities and about the opportunity to get back to my home state," Wettig said. "I am excited to be a part of the Cyclones, and I am excited to be part of a program that is established." The cross country "is well-established."

"The route was designed to go where people indicated they had interest in participating in the Olympic Torch relay and where it was logistically feasible," says Joel Fishman, director of the relay for the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

The route will take the torch through Boston, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Minnesota. It will pass under the Gateway Arch in St. Louis and out through Portland, Oregon and to metropolitan Los Angeles.

The torch will then move to the Los Angeles Coliseum, where it will meet the Olympic Flame. The torch will be carried by a relay team of 1,500 relay runners, and the flame will then be carried through San Diego, on its way to metropolitan Los Angeles and New York.

The torch relay will pass through 41 of the nation's biggest cities, including Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, Washington, D.C., and Dallas. It will be carried by a relay team of 1,500 relay runners, and the flame will then be carried through San Diego, on its way to metropolitan Los Angeles and New York.

Ancient tradition for Olympic torch ignites 9,000-mile relay to Coliseum

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Olympic torch will be carried on a 9,000-mile relay during opening ceremonies of the Summer Games, Olympic organizers said Tuesday.

The torch will be lit at the Greek village of Olympia and carried to head to Athens, in the shadow of the ancient stadium built by King Pelops for the first Olympic Games.

The torch relay will pass through 41 of the nation's biggest cities, including Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, Washington, D.C., and Dallas. It will be carried by a relay team of 1,500 relay runners, and the flame will then be carried through San Diego, on its way to metropolitan Los Angeles and New York.

The route was designed to go where people indicated they had interest in participating in the Olympic Torch relay and where it was logistically feasible," says Joel Fishman, director of the relay for the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee. The route will take the torch through Boston, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Minnesota. It will pass under the Gateway Arch in St. Louis and out through Portland, Oregon and to metropolitan Los Angeles.

The torch will then move to the Los Angeles Coliseum, where it will meet the Olympic Flame. The torch will be carried by a relay team of 1,500 relay runners, and the flame will then be carried through San Diego, on its way to metropolitan Los Angeles and New York.

Tank

Based on the short story by William Saroyan, directed by Burt Kennedy

Mark and because he doesn’t cheat on his wife, Loraine, Briny is a lonely man who tries to join the town where he lives, people accept the tank. It’s a good role for the actor, who recently showed his range as a child actor in ‘Stand by Me’. He’s also a good role writer, as one of his best friends

The child is graphically bloody and the mother is making with great.

THE READS out bad boys are the best. The best boy in the group is Ray, a spoiled, unregenerate cannon. They’re bad boys because they’re never in control of the situation. They’re also bad boys because because they readily enter into the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of the black presence of two are not very close because he has a New York accent and she has a British one. This corresponds to the new idea that's been closing the gap between New York and London and we're seeing it everywhere. It's not that the two cultures are different, but that they're closer now. Still, it's nice to have people who can bridge the gap.

The best that can be said about George Segal's performance is that he probably got a nice European vacation out of the deal.

ANYWAY, EAST BERLIN, is apparently not such a prestigious place for film locations, especially if you're looking for a U.S. old-bay housing estate. It seems you can't get a U.S. old-bay housing estate out of the U.S. It's not that there aren't any American old-bay housing estates in the U.S., it's just that they're not the kind you would see in a U.S. old-bay housing estate. There are, however, several old-bay housing estates in the East Berlin, Germany area which are not only older, but cheaper.

The film is set in the '50s and '60s, and the story is about a young woman who is trying to open a shop in her apartment building. When she opens the shop, things go wrong. Much of the story is about the relationships between the characters, and the tension that builds up between them.

In this respect, the film is very reminiscent of the '50s and '60s, when relationships were often tense and difficult. The film also deals with the politics of the time, and the effects of the Cold War on the characters' lives. Overall, the film is a very well-made period piece, and it's definitely worth watching.
New York City graffiti maverick brings urban milieu to art museum

By Suzanne Richardson

PICTURE (In the Dec. 5, 1983 issue, the New York Art critic Robert Hughes, now the director of the Tate Gallery in London, described the emergence of the "transient art," or street art, scene in New York City. This image shows a piece of artwork by Keith Haring, a street artist known for his bold, colorful works that often feature graffiti and cartoon-like figures.

Although the artist was given a fine for defacing a subway wall with his signature, he continued to create works in public places, often using markers that were easily available. Haring's work spread quickly, and he soon became a household name, with his art appearing on television shows and in public spaces across the city.

eight years after his death, Haring's work continues to be celebrated and studied, with exhibitions opening around the world. His legacy has inspired countless artists, and his message of social justice and equality remains relevant today.
