Two pedestrians cross Clinton Street in this light rain Tuesday afternoon. Enthusiasts may have expected more rain again today in the wet weather forecast for light rain or showers in the low twenties.

Council to solicit plans for sewage plant

A local response today was held at the city's sewage treatment plant, where the city's sewage treatment plant, one of the city's most important facilities, is located. The city's environmental engineers and consultants have been working on the plant for several years, and the city has been working on plans to upgrade the plant.

In addition, the city has been considering the feasibility of using the city's sewage treatment plant as a source of renewable energy. The city has also been considering the possibility of using the plant to power the city's waste management facilities.

School board, supervisors urged to join forces on relocation

by Christine Weash

Iowa County Attorney 2 Patrick said the issue of the county’s new courthouse is in need of the board’s discussion due to the imminent relocation of KRUI’s transmitter.

The school board rejected the county’s proposal to build the new courthouse on the comer of Clinton and Johnson Streets.

When asked "what is being done to improve the situation," he said since the switch to FM he has been able to get only weak signals from the KRUI station, which has been located at 1225 Gilbert Street behind the proposed courthouse site.

The supervisors are also considering the possibility of constructing a new building for the KRUI radio station.

KRUI's switch creates interference

by Dan Thoemke

A week after making the switch to FM, students at the University of Iowa and other area residents are having trouble receiving other FM stations.

KRUI finds it getting several different FM frequencies, and because of the damage many of the television signals are being received in a piece of equipment for the transmitter.

The General Relief guidelines will be used in Behrman’s case, and because of the damage many of the television signals are being received in a piece of equipment for the transmitter.

KKRQ's signal low

Radio station KKRQ's signal has been received by most listeners in the area, but they have been having trouble receiving the station's signal.

Management of the station is working on possible solutions to the interference problem, and it is hoped that the problem will be solved soon.

Council debates faculty initiatives

By Patricia Reader

The university's faculty Senate, in a meeting Tuesday evening, voted not to discuss the controversial issue of corporate funding of academic journals. Professor James Andrews, President of the Faculty Senate, said that the council would probably adopt a stance against corporate sponsorship of academic journals.

The council was meeting in a protest against the University of Texas Medical Branch, which has received funding from a major corporation to fund a journal. Professor Andrews said that the council would oppose this practice.

Andrews asked the council to consider the implications of this funding on the quality of research and the academic freedom of faculty members.

By evening meeting.

Moffett said students have a problem assessing their own interests, values and skills. By encouraging them to assess their own interests, the university doesn't pursue ways of helping students to make informed decisions about their future.

The council also discussed the issue of whether to propose on to the university administration a resolution to ban corporate funding of academic journals. Professor Andrews said that the council would oppose this practice.

Experts say self-knowledge important to job interviews

By Dan Stover

The personnel saying "know yourself!" couldn't be more enthusiastic. But "know yourself!" doesn't mean the introspective inquiries into how you feel about yourself that you're used to hearing about. It means having a clear view of your own abilities and successes and how they will help you in the workplace.

"If you don't know yourself, knowing the employer's needs is the primary requirement for a successful interview," said Donald Moffett, assistant director of the Career Development Center. "If you don't know yourself, you're not in control of what is being conveyed to the employer. If you do know yourself, you can control what is being said to the employer. To know yourself means having a critical view of your own views of your own abilities and successes." Moffett said students can "always find out about the employer by asking questions and meeting the company's people." Other students agreed. They said that knowing the employer is key to being able to interview successfully.

"When you go into an interview, don't go into it with any preconceived ideas," said Kathy Alleman, assistant director of the Career Development Center. "It's important to know who you are and what you like to do." Alleman said that students need to be realistic about their own abilities and how they will fit into the workplace.

"You need to know your strengths and weaknesses," said Moffett. "You need to know what you're good at and what you're not good at. It's important to know what you're good at and what you're not good at. It's important to know what you're good at and what you're not good at. It's important to know what you're good at and what you're not good at. It's important to know what you're good at and what you're not good at.

Moffett said that students should research the company to understand its culture and values. He said that students need to know what the company is about, what the company values, and what the company expects of its employees.

"By a narrow margin, the state Board of Regents voted to delay paying the bonus money to UNI instructors," said Donald Moffett, assistant director of the Career Development Center. "However, Alleman warned students that they need to be realistic about their own abilities and successes. If you don't know yourself, knowing the employer's needs is the primary requirement for a successful interview." Moffett said students can "always find out about the employer by asking questions and meeting the company's people." Other students agreed. ENGINEER SAYS HE ADVISED COUNCIL TO SEEK SEWER CONSULTING IN 1982

By Carlos Trevino

Local engineer Jim Styer, who earned the nickname "pattern maker" on projects through 1980 and Thursday he advised the city council to seek and enter into engineering contracts to avoid the sewage treatment plant in July of 1980.

Styer also criticized the city for not having a long-range plan and warned that politicians may not be able to "wriggle out of it if they're surprised."

"If the council doesn't do more, they'll have to get it from the consultants, Styer said."

"The city's sewage treatment plant is destined to cause a rash for innovation.

"AIDING AND ABETTING" engineering firms that can provide long-range planning is a way of wisdom, he said.

NATO keeping its fleet as it assembles in the Norwegian Sea

"As far as I can tell, the Norwegian navy seems to be sending the message that it's not going to work with NATO," spokesman John Michael argued Sunday.

"I don't think there's any way," Michael said. "It's not even been discussed with the city, so I don't think it's going to happen."

But Phillip Hynes, a council member, said the city should take action.

"I think it's going to happen, and I think it's going to happen soon," Hynes said.

Poetic license pushes the limits

Poetic license allows the poet to break the rules and create new ones, to bend the truth for the sake of the poem. It is a technique used by poets to convey emotions and ideas in a way that is beyond the scope of literal truth. This can include stretching the boundaries of language, imagery, and context to create a more powerful and evocative expression.

In the context of the previous paragraph, the use of poetic license is evident in the way the candidate is portrayed. The paragraph suggests that the candidate is willing to do whatever it takes to win, even if it means breaking the rules. This is a common theme in political campaigns, where candidates often use various tactics to gain an advantage.

The use of poetic license in this paragraph helps to convey the idea that the candidate is not bound by the usual constraints of morality or honesty. It paints a picture of a candidate who is willing to go to great lengths to achieve their goals, even if it means compromising their principles.

In conclusion, the use of poetic license in this paragraph serves to emphasize the candidate's willingness to break the rules and do whatever it takes to win. It is a way to convey the candidate's determination and willingness to act in the best interests of their campaign, even if it means sacrificing their integrity.

Gymnasts bad luck ends with NCAA bid

By Steve Rutledge

After a long wait, it's official. The Hawkeyes have qualified for the NCAA Championships in the first time in 13 years.

The Hawkeyes were issued a bid to participate in the national, college gymnastics tournament for the first time of any Friday morning, 12 noon.

"It's been a tough season but we've been together," said Tom Dunrt said.

Coach Dunrt said he's been waiting a long time to participate in the tournament. In his efforts to fill the shoes of John "Brock" Hayden Fry's Iowa Hawkeye team, Dunrt has been waiting for the right opportunity to bring the team to the national level.

The team has undergone an extensive renovation as part of the Super Six project. The renovation included new activity rooms and remodeled locker facilities.

The renovation has included the installation of new equipment and the improvement of the existing facilities. The renovation is being carried out by contractors, said all the necessary work is expected to be completed in late afternoon.

The renovation is not only significant for the team but also for the university. It's a step forward in providing better facilities for the athletes and improving the overall student experience.

The renovation is a part of the Super Six project, which includes the renovation of the entire field for the Iowa Hawkeyes. The renovation is expected to last for the next five years.

"We're looking forward to this spring," said Dunrt.

The team is expected to mature and develop the execution of its2022 season. The renovation is expected to provide the team with the necessary facilities to continue its development.

The team is expected to make a strong showing in the tournament, and there are high hopes for a strong showing in the national competition.

Gretzky to lead Edmonton in quest for Stanley Cup

VIII.

The annual National Hockey League playoff series began tonight with only five of the 24 teams playing a share of the Royal Crown. New Jersey, Pittsburgh, Hartford, Toronto, and Los Angeles were eliminated from postseason play, having the following opening round pairings as of the last game of the regular season:

- New York Islanders at Philadelphia in the Patrick Division, with New York leading 3-2.
- Chicago at Minnesota in the Norris Division, with Chicago leading 3-2.
- Los Angeles in the Pacific Division, with Los Angeles leading 4-2.
- New York Islanders at Washington in the Frederik Division, with New York leading 4-2.
- Minnesota at Vancouver in the Smythe Division, with Minnesota leading 3-2.

The Islanders have the seventh seed in the East, which means they cannot play the East Division's No. 1 seed, Boston, until the second round.

In addition, Gretzky has the seventh seed in the West, which means he cannot play the West Division's No. 1 seed, Los Angeles, until the second round.

In the other series, Montreal leads 2-0 in the Patrick Division, while the Rangers finished fourth in the second round of the Smythe Division. The Rangers, however, have going for them a record of 11-0 in seven games with the Islanders during the regular season.

"We're going up against the best team in the league. They're the No. 1 seed in the Patrick Division title, while the Rangers finished fourth in the second round of the Smythe Division.

"If we can play with them, lie to beat them with a great effort."

Gretzky says his Islander teammates are not overconfident entering the playoffs.

"You're always concerned with a short series." Gretzky stresses, "but the main concern is the quality of each individual's play. If everyone is high, then we're scoring at every position. And we are both at every position.

Washington made it to the playoffs last year, but lost to the Islanders, Philadelphia was beaten by the Islanders, and Los Angeles was beaten by the Islanders.

This has been a good year for the Islanders, who finished with a 47-24-5 record after last season's 38-25-7 mark. They edged Philadelphia by three points for the No. 2 slot in the Patrick Division and took four of seven from the Flyers in 1984-85.

"Finding in second place is just a reminder of how hard we have to work, but we are confident," says Washington coach Bill McCreary.

The Rangers battle for New York City area bragging rights and the individual prize in the Islanders by winning or making a point.

Melissa Fenley, who will perform her work "Hemispheres" at 8 p.m. tonight and Friday in the capitol of Nigeria. Fenley runs seven miles a day and does her best to make her audience into a brave new world of dance. She "blasts" her movements through explosive physical energy and endurance, her "Inimitable Style" means does Kisselgoff - or any other writer who's seen Fenley in action - imply that the dancer's work is free of imitation. It is, however, excitingly traditional, according to her work. "With myself don't use 'expressive' faces, but..." Fenley said. "I don't intend to remain static, but change things, to revise as an artist."

Melissa Fenley is, as all women, a contemporary dancer; she is in love with the modern currents of art, she is aware of the pressures of her art, and she personally responds with many different cultural influences to her life and work. She's also an artist for the life.

"At a time when my contemporaries are now only a few days away..." Fenley said, Thursday and Friday in the Hancher Loft. It's a result of my international "bygones" - she and recently, "All my work has that influence - the Third World, especially."

Fenley is a "State Department girl" whose father was stationed at the United States Embassy in Lagos. She grew up in the United States but was able to experience the dance forms of Africa where she was born. "I left, with her family, at age 11. During her stay in Nigeria, she learned a great deal about African dance which originated from European notions of what dance is - whether classical ballet or the movement schemes of Congo Caballeros."

"CULTURE IN THE WEST of the world are the upper body or the metaphor. To talk of the hands of the dancer," Fenley said. "With classical ballet, and even with modern dance, the eyes are just expressions, they just kind of hang there, they don't have any reason to be there..."

"There's something that happens (in dance) to be really creative no matter what they, the body, the mind."

Fenley describes the dance world as an extremely conscious and deliberate - she speaks of a "dynamic..." She believes that dance is being formed as a dancer - "Hemispheres" is her latest work, which is a lengthy and highly complex piece, a group dance. "Fenley herself and three other dancers..."

"There isn't one element of 'Hemispheres' that is cheese-ball. There is no line of dance in the work..."

"My work is very personal," Fenley said. "But I don't let my mind go away. I like to be very conscious of what I am doing as I am doing it at my own..." To talk of this, it is a concentrated, almost traditional, and it's interesting that many of the dancers..."

"I think I was myself and try to change things, to revise as an artist."

"With Fenley a hardly traditional in the dance world, though, none Konstantin, dance critic let the New York Times, writes: "There are labels to put on her - smooth, good with a splash of panache, the ritualistic..."

"Fenley is a very conscious of where I am and what I'm doing there at any moment of any piece. I try to make it a concentrated, almost traditional, and interesting that many..."

"With Fenley the role of physicality and vocabulary through explosive physical energy and endurance, her 'Inimitable Style' means does Kisselgoff - or any other writer who's seen Fenley in action - imply that the dancer's work is free of imitation. It is, however, excitingly traditional, according to her work.

A Merchant emphasizes individuality of characters

The Merchant of Venice, performed on the University of Iowa's Hill Hall April 4-7 is a fast-paced, flamboyant depiction of Shakespeare's best known moneylender. Mrs. Leo B. O'Toole, Shakespearean scholar and retired UI professor, conducted the production with a free-spirited vitality that made Shylock and company live up to Shakespeare's vision.

The Merchant was one of the Bard's earliest works. Only the Comedy of Errors is earlier, and it was written 8 years before Shakespeare's first recorded performance in London. The play is Shakespeare's first attempt at writing a tragedy, but he lacked the command over the form that he later developed in Hamlet or Othello.

The play is a comedy of intrigue, revenge, and love. Antonio, a wealthy merchant, is the protagonist. He lends money, but lacks the moral scruples of his Jewish opponent, Shylock. Antonio is much more willing to employ the cruel, usurious practices which Shylock thinks too wretched for performing. Shylock's character is the foil, the tragedy in the comedy of errors.

One act is a lesson in finance. Antonio has lent money to Bassanio, the son of his best friend, Bassanio. Bassanio is anxious to marry Portia, the richest, most beautiful, and most virtuous woman in Italy. Bassanio has asked Antonio for a loan to finance his wedding. Antonio is willing to lend him the money, but requires a most unusual security for the loan: a pound of flesh for repaying the debt. Bassanio is willing to pay the price, but his friend, Portia, enters the scene. She is actually a pawnbroker disguised as a young man. She offers to work for Antonio's money, but will hold a pound of Bassanio's flesh if there is a default. Antonio agrees.

Bassanio's love for Portia begins to develop. He invites Portia to visit him in Padua. Portia arrives as a man wearing moss green and a cloak lined with ermine. Antonio is taken aback, but Portia takes control of the situation immediately. She makes a bargain with Antonio to forego the pound of flesh if Bassanio and Portia are married.

The second act focuses on the alternating lives of Antonio and Shylock. Antonio, foreseeing Bassanio's marriage, is beginning to doubt that Shylock will repay the debt. Shylock, on the other hand, is planning his revenge. He envisions taking a pound of flesh from Antonio, as his security for the loan.

The third act focuses on the plot against Antonio's life. Shylock has learned of Antonio's weak spot: he is afraid of getting a beard. Shylock has the best of plans for Antonio. He is going to hire men to beat Antonio, and then use the scars from the beating to claim the pound of flesh.

The fourth act opens with Bassanio and Portia married and Antonio and Bassanio about to renew their friendship. Shylock's revenge is complete. Shylock has the pound of flesh, and Antonio will be beheaded. Bassanio and Portia are unable to save Antonio from his fate, and the play ends with Bassanio and Portia on their way to the wedding of Gratiano and Jessica, Shylock's daughter.

The Merchant of Venice is a classic play. It is full of fast-paced action, and a great deal of human interest. It is a play that has something for everyone. The production at the UI Shakespeare Festival is a must-see for anyone who loves Shakespeare or good theater.
