American spy returns home due to health

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Nicaraguan abductions are over, a self-styled counterterrorist arsenal in Nicaragua on suspicion of spying, would be released for health reasons.

President Ronald Reagan, refusing to bow to the demands of terrorists, announced today that he would release an American hostage in order to save his life.

The hostage, identified as John Slager, was taken prisoner on the same day he was captured in an operation to overthrow the Nicaraguan government.

Reagan's announcement came as the United States was preparing to stage a major military operation in the region.

The move was met with a wave of international condemnation, with many countries expressing concern about the implications for regional stability.

Reagan said the decision was based on medical advice and was not influenced by any political considerations.

He added: "This is a difficult decision, but it is the right one for the health of the country and the freedom of the hostage."

UI College announced Monday that four grants totaling $30 million have been awarded to the UI College of Medicine's Cardiovascular Center.

The implications of this for the university are very great," said a press conference charged with "singing the praises of the Medical Research Center." Eckstein went on to say that no one knew what else there was to do, but to refer him to the UI as a "majestic" institution.

The grants, awarded by the National Institute of Health, are expected to result in the creation of 200 new jobs, $2,250 per year for each investigator.

The four grants are:

- A $128,791 grant to John Georgakakos, a professor in the College of Medicine.
- A $185,000 grant to Richard W. D. Freedman, chairman of the Department of Pathology.
- A $73,000 grant to William A. Alexander, chairman of the Department of Medicine.
- A $1,000,000 grant to William A. Alexander, chairman of the Department of Medicine.

The grants raise the reputation of the college and are expected to bring additional faculty members to the center.

Art Center Relations gets new director

Dore Meneghetti, who has been a faculty member at the University of Iowa since 1985, has been appointed director of the Arts Center Relations.

Meneghetti will oversee the arts center's mission to "promote the arts" and "enhance the quality of life for all citizens." He will also be responsible for the arts center's finances and operations.

Meneghetti said he was "very excited" to take on the new role and that he looked forward to working with the arts center's staff and community members.

Meneghetti's appointment follows the resignation of the previous director, who left to pursue a career in the arts.

"I am thrilled to have Dore join us as the new director of the Arts Center Relations," said UI President Bruce B. Harreld. "He brings a wealth of experience and knowledge to the role and will be an excellent leader for our arts center."

Tight budget forces cut in library hours

By Carol Monaghan
Staff Writer

The president of the Iowa City Public Library Board of Truste resigned last week, saying the quality of service would suffer if the board proceeded to the full-funding level of hours as the board had authorized. "We were one step away from cut months," board President Carol Monaghan Buttrum said. "And just a month ago, ..." she said.

Bakos said the board should con sider the possibilities of changing user fees for library services, such as audiovisuals:

"Audiotapes is an area you could increase revenue by charg ing for services to existing users," Bakos said. But he thinks such fees would be undesirable taxes and wouldn't work.

"Each class has the staff we need to use the equipment," Bakos said.

Other ideas and constituencies proposed at Monday's meeting in cluding the Parks and Recreation Department, the Senior Center Commi and Main Street Program.

The city also discussed the possibility of changing the schedule of the existing services. Baker said the board should consider the possibility of changing the schedule of services.
Bakos said he was concerned about the board's ability to cut back hours.

We're the outreach aspect of the university," says Kristi Reinhold, assistant director of new admissions.

"We're the high schools, the college programs and visiting students," Reinhold said. "We're here to respond to these needs."
In the midst of racial tensions and union fighting, it is refreshing to see a group of people rise to meet a crisis in a more mature and rational manner. The predicament in this institution is by no means unique to this one; it is found throughout Wisconsin, Illinois, who was diagnosed earlier this month as suffering from AIDS. This report comes from two sources: the student's parents and the student himself. The school, which has not been identified by Central Elementary officials, is located in a suburban area of Iowa City.

The student, who has not been identified by Central Elementary officials, is located in a suburban area of Iowa City. The school board decided last week to permit the infected child to attend class because the student showed no signs of illness, is able to control highly functional does and functions and has been tested for this illness.

Parents and students are responding calmly to the news. Many letters from Central Elementary officials have been received from parents saying they support the decision, according to one source.

This reaction is a far cry from the one that occurred last year in Iowa City. A student at a suburban Iowa City school was diagnosed with AIDS at the end of the school year. The school district immediately closed the school to the community, and parents were told their children would not be allowed to return to school.

This decision was made after the student was diagnosed with AIDS. The school district immediately closed the school to the community, and parents were told their children would not be allowed to return to school.

The case is significant because it highlights the need for better understanding of AIDS and how it is transmitted. It also raises questions about how schools should respond to cases of AIDS.

NEW YORK (AP) - The Long Island Railroad and six unions that have been striking more than two months agreed Monday to extend their contract negotiations into a third week, but officials said there have been no breakthroughs in efforts to reach a settlement.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz is expected to meet later this week with officials of the American hostages based on the wide-ranging bribery scandal. He said.

"I am interested in trying to help gain the release of the hostages," he said. "But Mr. Reagan's arms-for-hostage deal has further endangered the hostages, and it is not clear how much it made it more difficult to gain their release," he said.

NEW TV show targets kids' math literacy

NEW YORK (AP) — There are days that you don't have to teach today's kids about and how to use television. The children of the television generation were born into a world of living color. There every move may have been captured on video. They see VCRs in stores. Television's children are not too young to peek at a Rolodex. They know what a newscast is about and how to read a menu. These are the people who, if they like a show, will tune in. This is theory, and why.

The idea that children should know best about what they do is not new. Children's Television Workshop, the group that gave America Sesame Street, has been at the forefront in the math-in-the-mix for more than 20 years.

But the idea that television can get kids excited about the basic concepts of mathematics is new. And it is an experiment to determine whether television can get kids excited about the basics of mathematics.

The children of the television generation have been taught that television is a source of information, a medium for entertainment, a source of knowledge. They have been taught that television can be a source of education. They have been taught that television can be a source of entertainment. They have been taught that television can be a source of knowledge.

But television has also been used to teach children about the basic concepts of mathematics. The idea that television can be a source of education has been taught to children. The idea that television can be a source of knowledge has been taught to children. The idea that television can be a source of entertainment has been taught to children.

appassionato and finally a standing ovation for the traditional Chinese Dissertation. The performance was a triumph.

Variations displayed a thrilling virtuosity as well as dramatic realism. For instance, in the famous "Tom Sawyer" moment where the warrior is shot, the clarity of the variations caught perfectly for signs of which were the most significant.

And some moments into the performance, the audience got a sense that "something" could never be repeated. A few moments after watching Sawdust, we experienced an appreciation for the sheer intensity of the dance, a moment that would be remembered forever.

We can expect the world-class talent in the future.

The Reluctant Empress is a fascinating historical work for those looking for a good story of the Austrians.

The Empress' own performances included all but two of the original 1700s by Rossini, including the famous "Barber of Seville" and "The Barber of Seville." The performances were a total success and the Empress was often riding for hours on her finest horse.

The book is written in the form of a biography that it becomes clear that the Empress was a woman of great character and determination.

The book explores the life of the Empress, including her love life, her wardrobe, and her impact on the world of art and music.

The Reluctant Empress is a captivating historical work for those interested in the Empress Elisabeth of Austria.

It is a deeply moving story that will leave readers spellbound. While Hamann does not comment on this lack of character, the story of the Empress Elisabeth is a captivating one that will leave readers spellbound.

The book is highly recommended for anyone interested in the Empress Elisabeth of Austria and the history of the period.
