UI, the world honor writing program

Founder Engle considers self a 'lucky man'

by B. Gordon

Washington Post

Paul Engle's48th year of work at the University of Iowa's Writers' Workshop was celebrated last month as the workshop turned 50 years old. Engle, 66, began teaching at the workshop in 1947 and has been its director since 1951. He has been a key figure in the development of the workshop and its influence on the literary world.

"I am convinced that there cannot be true freedom without freedom and democracy, which, in turn, will only be attained through comprehensive dialogue and negotiated peace," he said. "I also think that the Central American president has the responsibility to fully make his own country with all the obligations and responsibilities that he has to fulfill as to the country."

The Iowa City native and University of Iowa alumnus has had a long association with the workshop since he began working there in the late 1940s. He has served as a visiting professor at American University, which hosted the Writers' Workshop in 1961. Engle's most recent book, "The American Poet," was published in 1988.

Engle, who is also known for his activism on behalf of Central American countries, says he will continue to work on behalf of peace in the region. "I will continue to work on behalf of peace in the region," he said. "I will continue to work on behalf of peace in the region."

Elderly suspect on Iowa’s wanted list

TAVERAS, FLA. — A 72-year-old suspect in a grocery store robbery is a talking criminal who carried a newspaper clipping about his Iowa theft that helped lead to his arrest last week, police said Wednesday.

Bristol B. Tavares, 72, was held in the Lake County jail in lieu of $5000 bond based on a charge of armed robbery. He was found carrying a copy of a Florida newspaper clipping about a well-known criminal, police said.

"We do not mean checking and this has been arrested in various states — Michigan, Indiana, Iowa — and he's wanted around the country. We're not saying this is the guy, but we've been following this story doing all the way back to provide information," Bristol said.

"He's been a lengthy career."

Bristol's latest brush with the law was Monday afternoon, when he had an argument with a security guard and demanded cash, Bristol said.

The robber left the store with two bags of candy. But unknown to the thief, the guard was in the police station and he was caught about a short time later.

One money bag had been turned over to the officer when, still wanting more, Tavares demanded more cash. The officer wasn't saying how much money was taken.

"We only did in town a couple weeks," Daniels said. "He checked out of the hotel he was staying in that morning, had taken his bag, went to the Greyhound Bus Station and was on his way out of town when we caught him."

POLICE FOUND in Bristol's pocket a crumpled newspaper story about himself being listed on the state's wanted list as a member of the Florida Roadkill gang.

"It's unbelievable this guy's still doing this," said Bristol Police Chief Ron Bisel. "He's listed on the state's wanted list as a member of the Florida Roadkill gang and in the April 1986 armed robbery where he took $3000 from a grocery store in Harlan, Iowa."

He also had in his pockets a .38-caliber pistol and a can of spray paint.

Kemp speaks to crowd on Bork, football, abortion

By Anne Karvin
The Daily Iowan
Congressman and presidential hopeful Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., said he supports the NFL's policy of striking against the uw in its lawsuit and would take a firm stand, except as the father of a professional player.

"I'll know enough about the issues to say whether or not I would be a striking at the time of the merger and was kicked out by the pro-union players," Kemp said.

In his address to about 150 people in Phillips Hall, Kemp also said he strongly opposes abortion, citing the Jeffersonian idea of human life in our society.

"The Supreme Court, which is the highest court in the land, was right in Roe v. Wade when they overturned the law," Kemp said. "I'm opposed to the destruction of any human life whatsoever ."

For five years, Jack Kemp presided over the AFL Players' Association, a job that ended in 1969 when the AFL merged with the NFL. A football player starting in 1957, playing for five years, Kemp said he believes his son has "legitimate reasons" for returning to the gridiron.

"I'm sympathetic, my feelings, obviously are with the players," Kemp said, speaking before a crowd gathered at Phillips Hall Wednesday morning.

In the region of 1980, the Daily Union organized a project to train Iowa high school students in the art of public speaking. The students were to prepare and deliver speeches on various topics, culminating in a statewide competition. The purpose of the project was to foster public speaking skills among young people and provide a platform for them to develop their abilities.

The project was sponsored by the Daily Union and the Iowa State University. It was divided into several phases, including preparation sessions, practice speeches, and a final competition. The competition was held in the Des Moines area, and the winners were selected based on their performance in the competition.

The students were provided with a range of topics to choose from, including current events, local issues, and personal stories. They were encouraged to express their views on these topics in a clear and concise manner.

The competition was a success, with many students participating and showing great enthusiasm. The project provided a valuable learning experience for the students and helped them develop the skills necessary for effective public speaking.

The Daily Union also provided editorial coverage of the project, highlighting the students' participation and the importance of public speaking in our society.

In summary, the Daily Union's project was a valuable educational endeavor that provided a platform for young people to develop their public speaking skills and express their views on various topics. It was a success and provided a valuable learning experience for the students involved.
Quake tremor rattles Midwest states

WASHINGTON — An earthquake with its epicenter near Joplin, Missouri, hit the state's southeast corner Wednesday night, causing one person to be injured and several others to be treated for injuries ranging from cuts and bruises to possible broken bones.

The magnitude 4.2 earthquake was felt across much of the state, including Kansas City, Springfield and St. Louis. Officials said there were no reports of damage or injuries.

A 4.4 magnitude earthquake also hit the same area early Wednesday morning, triggering a small tsunami that caused some flooding.

The tremors were felt as far away as 150 miles from the epicenter in Joplin, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

A 3.8 magnitude earthquake hit the area early Tuesday morning, but no damage or injuries were reported.

Inmates escape from prison in Texas

About 100 inmates escaped from the Tarrant County Jail in Ft. Worth, Texas, early Wednesday morning, according to a statement from the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

The escaped inmates were just a few of the 7,000 people being held at the facility at the time of the escape. The prison is one of the largest in the state, with a capacity of 10,700.

The incident is being investigated by the prison's internal affairs division.

Labor Secretary to run Dole campaign

WASHINGTON — Labor Secretary William Brock will announce his decision to serve as vice president of the Republican ticket on Thursday, according to a source close to the campaign.

Brock, who is former chairman of the Republican National Committee, was expected to help Dole this week, but plans were altered after the former president's illness.

Senate angered by AIDS comic book

WASHINGTON — The Senate, outraged by a comic book featuring a positron-emitting Muslim, voted Wednesday to vote off federal funds for AIDS education grants to the Muslim 여행 association.

The 9-6 vote was a blow for the Senate, which had recently passed a $400 million bill for the departments of health and human services and labor.

The Senate's decision is a setback for the White House, which has been pushing for an AIDS education plan for several months.

WASHINGTON, D.C. (UPI) - President Ronald Reagan, hoping to build support in Supreme Court nominees Robert Bork, wanting the rejection would declare "American democracy.

The Senate will consider the nomination of Bork to the Supreme Court tomorrow, and the White House has been urging senators to vote for him.

"I've had a dream," he said, "to try to put a man on the Supreme Court who would understand a free enterprise system." Reagan said he had discussed the nomination with a number of senators, and they had agreed to vote for Bork.

"We need people on the Supreme Court who understand the workings of the free enterprise system," Reagan said. "I think Bork has a pretty clear understanding of what the free enterprise system is all about." Reagan said he had spoken to Bork about his nomination, and Bork had agreed to accept the nomination.

Last week American combat helicopters attacked and sank three Iranian patrol boats near the Iranian cities of Isfahan and Bushehr in the Persian Gulf. The attacks came after the Iranians had fired several rockets at the U.S. destroyers Spruance and Vicksburg, which were 80 miles from the Iranian coast. The Iranians denied the attacks, but the United States said it had evidence of Iranian participation.

Discipline needed

The recurring CIA reports of the agency's involvement in the international community of black-power groups and the spread of such groups have been alarming. The reports have raised questions about the agency's role in the spread of radicalism and the extent of its involvement in such activities.

Taking action

President George Bush announced on October 19 that he had ordered a review of the CIA's activities in Central America, including its covert operations. The review, which is expected to last several months, will examine the CIA's role in supporting the Contra rebels and the impact of its activities on the region.

Dear Editor,

I am writing to express my concern about the recent CIA activities in Central America. The reports of the agency's involvement in supporting the Contra rebels and the instigation of violence have raised serious questions about the agency's role.

Sincerely,

[Name]
Engles

"The original, accused subject doesn't seem to feel guilty. He doesn't feel any guilt. Thank God I was cleared doing as much as I did," Engles said.

But Engles staunchly met the issue of violence. "The greatest degree of the moral philosophy of the world has ever known," Engles said. "The idea of violence is a concept that is based on the idea of violence being the way to achieve justice."

A FAMILY OF three men was killed in the gambling house fire. "They were at the table, and we were just talking," Engles said. "They were not talking about anything in particular."

The next meeting is to be held at the post office at 4 p.m. for a few weeks, Engles said.

"WE NEVER PREDICTED that we could have a writer out of a broken home," Engles said. "But that's where we are at."
Iowa linebacker Lou Morris moves in on Michigan marks in the first quarter of the game, which Iowa won 12-10.

Iowa linebacker Trent Quast is back doing what he does best—punishing opposing running backs. This year, Quast has taken his game to a new level.

Quast, a 6-foot-0, 225-pound busi­ness major, has become a defensive stal­wart for the Hawkeyes. As a freshman last year, he broke into the starting lineup against Wisconsin and quickly became a defensive main­stay. He finished with 51 tackles, third-best in the Big Ten.

Iowa's quarterback Kirk Ferentz has praised Quast's ability to play the game at a high level, saying, "He's our heartbeat. He's the guy we look to make sure we're settled in the back seven."

Quast's leadership on and off the field has been key to Iowa's success this season. He has been named to several All-Big Ten teams and was a finalist for the Butkus Award, given to the nation's best linebacker.

More NFL players cross picket lines

By Mark Adster

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — At least 60 players crossed picket lines Wednesday in the longest single-day walkout in NFL history, the players union said, as the league and players union prepared to meet Thursday after the league canceled another game.

The players union said Wednesday that 60 players were reported to have crossed the line in the first day of the league’s lockout. The union said the players had crossed the picket line in an effort to return to work and negotiate a new labor agreement.

Players have been on the picket line since March 28, when the league locked them out to try to get a new labor agreement. The players union has said it won’t return to work until it gets a new labor agreement.

More than 60 players have crossed the picket line in the last 24 hours, according to the union. The move comes as the league and players union prepare to meet Thursday, when the league plans to resume negotiations.

The league has offered a new proposal that would give the players a larger share of the league’s revenue, but the players union has rejected the offer.

In a statement, NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said, “We heard the players loud and clear. They want us to make a change, and so that is what we are doing.”

The players union has said it will not return to work until it gets a new labor agreement. The league has said it will not return to work until it gets a new labor agreement.

During the 24-hour period, the players union said it received reports of more than 100 players crossing the picket line. The union has said it expects more players to cross the picket line as the lockout continues.

Players who cross the picket line do so at their own risk, the union said. They are not guaranteed any compensation for the games they miss.

The league has said it will not play games until the lockout is resolved, and the union has said it will not return to work until it gets a new labor agreement.

There are other incidents that could have doomed this as the big game of the year, but the most part of this is the fact that these are the two teams who will be playing for your votes. The team that wins will take home the spoils of victory, while the other will be left to ponder what might have been. It's a battle of wills, a contest of heart and soul, and the winner will be the team that can come through under pressure.

There are no guarantees in life, but there are some certainties. One of them is that when you play against the best, you are bound to learn. And when you learn, you grow. In the end, it's not just about winning or losing; it's about becoming a better player, a more versatile athlete, and a more valuable team member. The lessons we learn on the field stay with us long after the final whistle blows.

Astros General Manager Wagner quits

Hints on rift with Lanier, team owner

By Joe Coshan

Joining Dan Sullivan of the Houston Chronicle and the Daily Newsroom, Houston Chronicle reporter Joe Coshan, felt the need to explain his position on the matter as well as to explain the circumstances of the rift between Lanier and Wagner, the team owner.

"I would like to say that it's not Lanier to Wagner," Wagner told reporters at a news conference. "The fact is I have a really hard time reading John McMullen. I feel that's the biggest thing to the team owner." Wagner said it was not easy to keep him on, but he thought it was best to make a decision.

"THE DECISION TO LEAVE was mine, I have with the owner," Wagner said. "It's still difficult. There's no doubt about that. It hurt to see the results of the backlash. I don't know what he wanted from me. I had a hard time reading what he expected of me, as person and as a general manager.”

Wagner and Lanier had tremendous built-in part because of the themes and player trades. Several times Lanier openly criticized Wagner for not making deals that strengthened the club.

"I don't want to talk about anything that I might do, might consider doing, until Oct. 24," he said. "I don't want to do it now. It's been a really hard time for me. I'm going to have a hard time the next few weeks. I've been away from the team for a while. I've been away from the team for a while."

Irishman Seamus Heaney to read his ‘jarringly real’ poetry tonight in Phillips

By Laurene Smith

S eamus Heaney, who Robert Lowell described as “the best modern Irish poet,” will be reading tonight at 8 p.m. in the Phillips Hall. The reading is part of the 20th anniversary celebration of the International Writing Program, and is being sponsored by the Writer’s Workshop and IOWAN.

Whether or not Lowell’s assessment of Heaney’s poetry is true in part, it is true that Heaney’s poems are collected in a number of slim volumes, and are used as a springboard to a discussion of the writer’s life. The same rhythm and style in which the poems are written is also apparent in his reading tonight.

In his latest work, a conversation with his most recent poetry collection, the writer’s surprise is the America of Iowa that was not easily perceived. Heaney’s poetry, in fact, is a quality of life similar to the one he perceived in his own work and life. Heaney has always been known for his ability to observe the common and the everyday, and to make his poetry’s difficult, often strange, always beautiful.

The contents of beauty and matter, particularly the lively and busy, are one of the most striking changes of Heaney’s poetry. The same rhythm and style he used in his first works are repeated today in his reading. Seamus Heaney’s poetry is a vibration of the world around him. The world comes to Iowa, and the writer’s surprise is the America of Iowa that was not easily perceived.

Reading

"One of the poems which have to be kept down," the terrain of Heaney’s poetry is difficult, as his work is with his voice and life.

Heaney was born on a farm called Inishowen in County Derry near Derrybeg, County Donegal, in Northern Ireland. He was educated at St. Joseph’s College at Belfast and at Harvard University. He has received an honorary degree from the University of Iowa at Urbana-Champaign.

His first book of poetry, Death of a Naturalist, won the Writers’ Prize, and the book was popular and critically well-received. It was awarded the Bridgehampton Poetry Prize for 1966. His second book of poetry, Deep Time, won the Maxwell Perkins Award, and the book was critically well-received. It was awarded the Bridgehampton Poetry Prize for 1966.

The book celebrates the ambience of a lovely state

By Ayerworth K. Finney

W hile the world seems to tumble, one thing remains the same: Iowa. And, to a certain extent, so is the ambience that has set it apart from the rest of the world.

It is a land of setting suns, of setting suns, and setting suns. The sun is always setting, and the sun is always rising. When the sun is setting, the sun is setting, and the sun is setting.

The International Writing Program, founded in 1973 by Paul Engle, has been a haven for writers and artists representing the world. The program is the only one of its kind in the world. The program is the only one of its kind in the world.

wow, self-paying students, beer, and rolls of colored toilet paper.

Whatever has been true of the world ever since, the writers in this anthology almost unanimously extol the IWP. While the program at the University of Iowa is one of the few places in the literary “country without boundaries,” the book echoes both its reputation, sociopolitical themes. After reading the introduction and the first title or two pages, readers are aptly aware of the great value and importance of the IWP. It is a wonderful book, both for the modern reader, books of the fine and famous, and the future poet. The book is a remarkable program in the history of American literature.

icientific director Ridley Scott has moved into familiar territory in his new status as witness, begins to make him one of the most familiar names in the industry. His latest project, Watch Over Me, is a film about a police officer who is trying to protect his family.

The film stars Scott as Mike Keegan, a Queens cop who is happily married and has two small children. Keegan is suddenly confronted with the brutal murder of his wife, a case that has provided enough complications for the rest of his life. To make matters worse, Keegan realizes that his wife's death was not an isolated incident but rather the start of a larger network of criminals.
