Midyear 1992 had its ups and downs

Nearby, 3,000 people were involved in rating on the festival's opening night, and 22 injuries were reported. The audience had been told to expect a massive, high-energy rock concert, but local authorities were able to contain the crowd for the rest of the weekend.

June

It was the month that a New Ford Street was attacked by a rash of bad luck. The President-in-Chief was involved in a near-fatal accident, and a student organization began voicing its rage at the verdict. Violence following the 1992 national headlines included a national headline, and the blaze, which was caused by a faulty electrical outlet in a dormitory, also caused $50,000 in damages.

May

In May, a second fire in four years occurred on the University of Iowa campus. The fire was caused by faulty electrical outlets in dormitories and caused $50,000 in damages.

April

A couple who alleged that a dormitory fire was caused by faulty electrical outlets in a dormitory, also caused $50,000 in damages.

March

A new campuswide ban on smoking and university officials voiced their concerns about the policies.

February

The university announced that it had awarded a $2,000 grant to a student organization.

January

The university announced that it had received a $2,000 grant from the National Science Foundation.

Upcoming graduation evokes mixed emotions

Anne Johnson

The Daily Iowan

Almost every year, seniors and their family heave a sigh of relief knowing that the college years are finally coming to an end. But the thought of saying goodbye to a familiar place with familiar faces also has a bittersweet tone. "I'll miss the clientele," sophomore Pat Soderberg said. "I'll miss people like you, and I'll miss the teachers."

Although her search has produced a few promising leads, Smith said she has been "hanging with everyone," trying to keep the search alive. "For the first time in my life, I'm not happy, where I'm going to be next fall," Smith said.

"If something would work out in time, we would do it. If it's not going to be a job where you graduate, or a job where you are starting a new city going through it by yourself in a 4 by 4 car," graduate senior Riley Ireland Smith said.

Smith, who has a double major in psychology and English, has been attending grad school since March of last year, either attending or public relations all summer.

HOLIDAY CELEBRATIONS KROS

Kwanzaa honors African-Americans' cultural heritage

Susan KeATon

The Daily Iowan

While Christmas set up safety and happiness for some, African-Americans will light the candles of a candelabrum to celebrate Kwanzaa, a weeklong commemoration.

Kwanzaa, which is celebrated from Dec. 26 through Jan. 1, is a celebration that originated in the African-American community. In the 1960s, a group of Black educators created the holiday for the purpose of acknowledging African-American history by celebrating seven principles: unity, self-determination, collective work and responsibility, cooperative economics, purpose, creativity, and discipline.

"It's a celebration that includes the African-American community," said Kwanzaa chairperson Mary Lou Smith. "It's for the community to get together and celebrate." This year, Kwanzaa will be held in the Iowa Communications Center.

Although Kwanzaa is a weeklong commemoration, some African-American families participate in a shorter celebration for two or three days. These celebrations include one red candle for unity, one black candle for self-determination, and five green candles for cooperative economics.

Iowa looking into the wind energy source

Associated Press

DES MOINES — The forces of the wind are blowing to increase the wind power potential for Iowa in the coming years, a state official said on Tuesday.

Iowa, a state known for its agricultural heritage, is also home to one of the largest wind farms in the Midwest. The state's rich history in agriculture has helped it become a leader in renewable energy production.

Mike Smith, the state's chief renewable energy officer, noted that the state is well-suited for wind energy production because of its large open spaces and high wind speeds.

The state is currently working on several wind projects, including the construction of a new wind farm in western Iowa. This project is expected to generate enough electricity to power 100,000 homes per year.

In addition, Iowa is home to several large wind energy companies, including Vestas and Gamesa. These companies are working to increase the state's wind energy capacity.

Smith said that the state is also working to improve its infrastructure to support wind energy production. This includes upgrading the state's transmission lines to allow for the transport of electricity generated by wind farms.

The state is also working to increase its workforce in the wind energy sector. This includes training programs for workers and incentives for businesses that invest in wind energy.

Smith said that the state is committed to increasing its wind energy capacity to reach its goal of generating 50% of its electricity from renewable sources by 2050.

Roger Mannu

Associated Press

DES MOINES — Faculty at Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa in Cedar Falls have been working on a project to increase the wind farm's efficiency.

The project is led by Dr. Paul Johnson, a professor at Iowa State University. He said that the project is aimed at increasing the efficiency of wind turbines by using advanced computational fluid dynamics (CFD) models.

Johnson said that the project is funded by a grant from the National Science Foundation. He added that the project is expected to last for three years.

The project is part of a larger effort to increase the state's wind energy capacity. Iowa is currently home to one of the largest wind farms in the Midwest and is a leader in renewable energy production.

The project is expected to help increase the state's wind energy capacity by up to 30%.

Hello 'Coalition,' goodbye Freedom

My next-door neighbor is in the U.S. military, conservation politics and was a delegate to the 1992 Iowa GOP convention. Last May, he was deployed to South Asia. What he has described to me is not only what he is doing, but also the impact the deployment has had on his family. He and his family are part of a larger community of military families, a community that is both unique and resilient.

As he prepares to return home, he and his family are looking forward to the reunion. They are also preparing for the challenges that lie ahead. The deployment has taught him valuable lessons about resilience, adaptability, and perseverance. He is eager to share these lessons with his community and to continue to support those who are also facing similar challenges.

We should all take the time to thank our military families and to support them in whatever way we can. They are heroes in every sense of the word.

Teach America a worthy cause

Editor:

You are correct in noticing Teach For America. Founders in the early days of the not-for-profit were John Goodenough and Willard Gaylin. Their goal was to train college graduates who would then go into the classroom to teach subjects that were not being taught in school districts across the country.

Teach America's model is to hire college graduates who are currently in college or who have recently graduated. They are then sent to schools that are struggling academically. The idea is to help these students learn to teach and provide them with the skills necessary to succeed in the classroom.

While Teach America is a worthy cause, it is important to remember that the goal is to teach students, not to train teachers. The program has been criticized for not providing the necessary training and support to ensure that its graduates are effective educators.

Thank you for bringing this to our attention.

Is it really jobs vs. the environment?

Lately, the political campaign seems much more focused on jobs and the economy. The outcome of these elections has been much more self-focused, and the candidates have been much more interested in the interests of the people who are electing them. The candidates have been much more concerned with how the people in their districts will vote, and not so much concerned with the future of the country.

I think this is unfortunate. The American economy is important, but so is the environment. We need to find a way to balance these two priorities.

We should be concerned with how the environment is affected by the candidates' policies. We should also be concerned with how the candidates' policies will affect the economy. We need to find a way to balance these two priorities.

DETOIT — A preliminary hearing was set for two police officers who arrested an African-American man in an alleged drug arrest, after a witness said the officers did not inform her to change her statement.

The discrepancies in her testimony involved whether the drug was, Green, had a rock of crack cocaine in his hand and that he was carrying it in his pocket. The preliminary hearing will determine if there is sufficient evidence for a full trial.

Pace testified Tuesday that she saw Bailey jump into Green's car after the arrest, but later she said she didn't really see a rock of crack and that he kicked an officer. Later she said she didn't really know what, if anything, was in Green's hand and that he was carrying it in his pocket.

Giants hire Baker, who hires staff

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO—Dusty Baker became the latest new face in the San Francisco baseball universe when he was hired today to replace manager Joe Altobelli.

Baker, the Giants hitting coach the past four seasons, had been working the past three years for the Dodgers. He became San Francisco's hitting coach on Dec. 1.

Giants general manager Bob Quinn, noting that Baker had outstanding hitting coaching skills, first-hand knowledge of Giants personnel and the atmosphere of the organization and the reputation of the incoming manager, said, "Dusty Baker is a perfect fit in the environment of this club." Quinn also added that Baker had been interested in becoming a manager, and that after Altobelli was fired Dec. 1, Quinn sai d.

"We started our search for a manager and I thought Baker would be a fine candidate. He has the ability to take what he does and translate it to the dugout. We're excited." With Baker, the Giants are bringing back a former hitting coach who was a special instructor with the Giants the past two seasons and the American League's hitting coach in 1991.

Baker was hired as hitting coach of the Giants in 1988, but he was not asked to return at the end of the 1990 season.

Women gymnasts stressing teamwork

Karm L. Lucek

The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women’s gymnastics team, which has undergone a significant change in recent years, is gearing up to be ready for its season opening on Friday.

After a five-year coaching vacancy, Coach Shane O’Meara feels that the biggest change in the program is the small amount of veterans. Iowa has been looking to bring in new talent and taking advantage of the opportunities for working together and being around on game days.

Marchibroda said, "We've won, we've lost, we've been good and bad. But even a mediocre quarterback can have a great game when he has help."

"They've hung together and stuck together. A lot of times they may not have won, or they may not have worked hard... but they haven't stopped playing," Marchibroda said.

Marchibroda’s biggest contribution has been making the players believe in themselves, they say.

"At the '93 game just believe they're going to win. That's something that he changed," said eight-year senior linebacker Tim Nelson.

"We were 0-10 in our last two seasons. Now we're 1-0. We've won seven games in a row after winning just once in our first three games," Nelson said.

"To win seven games in a row after winning just once in our first three games and having an inexperienced quarterback," Marchibroda said.

Riverside Theatre celebrates 12 years of continuous success

Sonja West
The Daily Iowan

What do you do when you’ve just finished your graduate work in theater and you need to make a living in Iowa City—not exactly the theater capital of the world? If you’re Ron Clark, John Hinman or Laura Wheat, you start your own company and continue to produce and perform continuously for 12 years.

“We started with the idea of providing ourselves with an entrepreneur... out of necessity,” Clark said. “Iowa City seemed like a fertile place to give rise to a small theater company. Because there wasn’t one.”

Now in its 12th season, Riverside Theatre has enjoyed continued success performing on a shoestring budget, operating a program for young thespians and touring nationally.

“Although we have a few key people in the company, the company even has its own professional theater... out of necessity,” Clark said. “12 years of continuous success is an anomaly in the theater industry.”

Riverside Theatre celebrated its 12th anniversary this summer by presenting “An Irish Wake,” a play on gun control commissioned by the Iowa City-based Iowa Gun Control Commission.

“We’re doing what we believe in, which, sadly, most people don’t believe in,” Clark said. “Riverside is a progression of all the things that have changed since we opened 12 years ago.”

“We have changed our business since the company opened,” said Jody Clark, managing director. “We’ve always been about creating a space for people in society, not just students.”

The newly renovated Riverside is also flexible and can be transformed into a theater-in-the-round stage.

“Riverside to the Iowa is never more than turning away or sliding back,” Clark said. “You never stand still, you’re either moving ahead or moving back,” Clark said.

The type of show Riverside will produce is dependent on the actors’ work, Clark said. “We’re moving ahead or sliding back,” Clark said.

The new theater is also flexible, with a large turnover of dollars in the theater.

“Riverside is still not turning away or moving back,” Clark said.

Despite its 12 years of existence, Riverside has a commitment to moving ahead or sliding back,” Clark said.

“The type of show Riverside will produce is dependent on the actors’ work,” Clark said.

“We’re moving ahead or sliding back,” Clark said.

Riverside is also still re-homing on the new theater on Gilbert Street. The newly renovated theater is scheduled to open this fall.

“We’re doing what we do, which, sadly, most people don’t believe in,” Clark said.

“We have changed our business since the company opened,” said Jody Clark, managing director.

“This is obviously Barry Levinson’s baby,” he added. “He directed, wrote with Valerie Curtis and produced with Mark Johnson.”
