Despite faculty raise, UI pay ranking drops

Jim Snyder
The Daily Iowan

Despite a 2.5 percent pay increase this year, the UI faculty lost some financial ground against the school's competitors, a report released Friday states.

The report compares the average salary of UI faculty and staff to 10 other universities around the country and will be reviewed by the Iowa state Board of Regents at its meeting Wednesday.

For nine-month faculty, excluding clinical faculty in the UI College of Medicine who earn money as practicing physicians, the average salary is $58,700, 2.5 percent higher than it was last year. This will likely drop the UI in faculty pay ranking from third to fifth among comparable schools. The UI average salary ranks second among Big Ten schools.

UI Provost Peter Nathan said the comparison drop could be consequential when recruiting faculty members.

"It's important to be perceived within the Big 10 and institutions with which we compete as able to meet market conditions," Nathan said. "If we can't, we will begin to lose faculty and will be unable to replace them with the same quality."

The report shows that women, while making progress, still get paid less than men on average, although the UI gave a greater pay increase this past year to women. On average, women's salaries increased 3.08 percent, compared to a 2.48 percent increase for men.

The average professional and scientific male staff salary is $37,811,

College of Dentistry settles with state safety agency

Alleged charges of health violations against the UI College of Dentistry have been dropped, as the state's safety agency has reached a settlement with the college.

Original fines of $8,500 were reduced to $400. There were also five violations in which three of the charges were dropped and the other two were amended to less serious counts, according to the Iowa Department of Labor.

One charge alleged that staff members did not wear long-sleeved scrub uniforms when assisting in oral surgery to protect from potential blood splashes.

A second, reduced violation involved the failure of the college to properly train some staff members in the proper use of hazardous chemicals in the department.

Local 12 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees union objected to the settlement, stating that all cited items were valid, and none should have been dropped.

ISU student arrested for allegedly poisoning roommate's food

An Iowa State University junior was arrested Thursday after he allegedly poisoned his roommate's food.

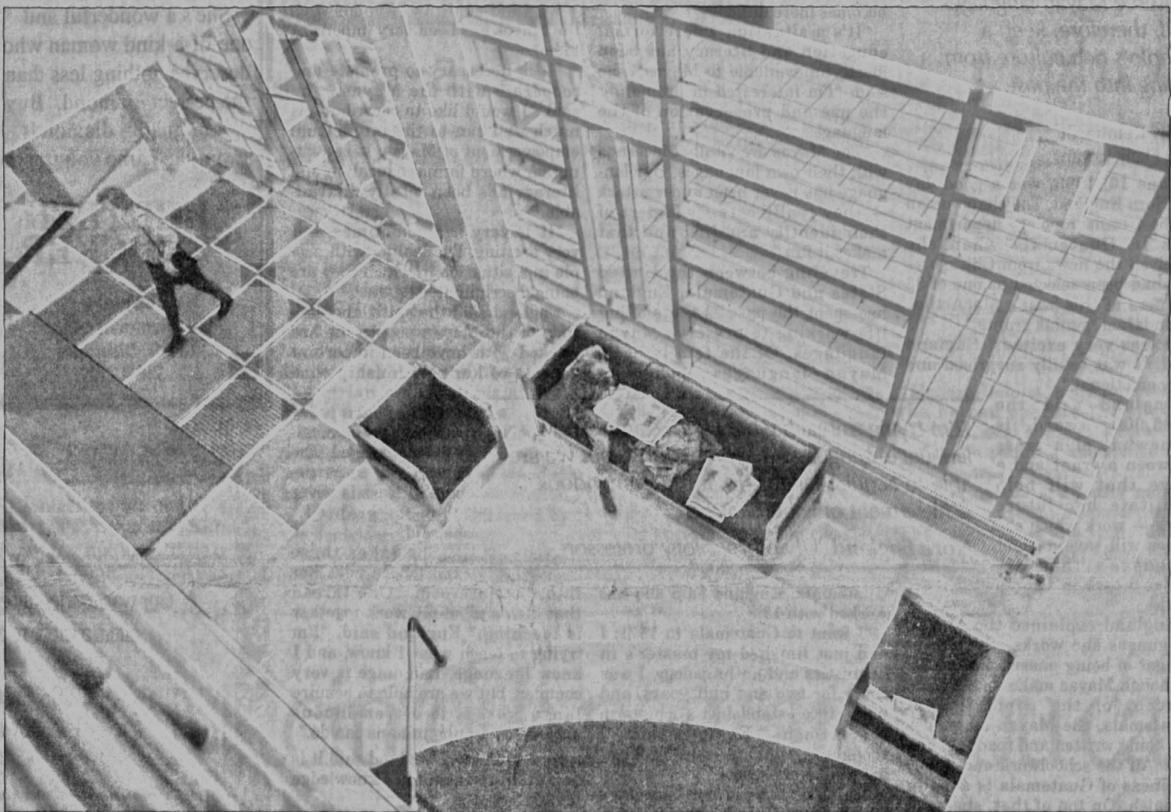

Thomas Scannell, 20, could face attempted murder charges if tests show the substance used on some of ISU senior Brad Kohlmeyer's food was deadly.

Scannell, released on bond Friday, was charged with the felony of administering a harmful substance to another person.

Another roommate, ISU senior Mike Owen, said Kohlmeyer and Scannell had been arguing about such matters as leaving the lights on, using too much water and cleaning. He said the food may have been tainted with a cleaning solution such as Formula 409.

FRATERNITY SHOCKED

Car crash takes life of student

Rima Vesely
The Daily Iowan

A 19-year-old UI student died in an automobile accident Friday night when he drove his car off the road and hit a sign beside the UI Theatre Building on Riverside Drive.

Nicholas Seitz Gates, a sophomore pledge of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, could not be resuscitated by Iowa City police and medical emergency personnel who arrived at the scene.

"It came as a very big shock to everybody," said Andrew Erickson, a pledge of Sigma Phi Epsilon. "Nobody expected it. It caught us by surprise."

According to police reports, the damage to the vehicle, a Chevrolet Blazer, was extreme. The lower crossbar on the sign Gates struck hit the windshield. There was also damage to the roof. The Jaws of Life were used to remove Gates from the vehicle.

"He was trapped, but he suffered no obvious trauma," said Troy Kelsay, the sign patrol and technical accident investigator for the Iowa City Police Department.

Late-night shooting mystifies witnesses

A shooting outside the Que Sports Bar, 211 Iowa Ave., early Sunday morning has police as well as the bar's employees puzzled.

Kevin Moses, 24, of Cedar Rapids was shot in the leg as a group of people congregated around the bar after it closed. Moses was treated at the UI Hospitals and Clinics' emergency room and released.

The Que's owner, Roy Yelder, said he was escorting some friends to their car when he heard the gunshots. He said he had noticed no fighting in the crowd of about 60 to 75 people.

"That's what so strange about it," said Yelder, who ran back into the bar and asked someone to call an ambulance. "There was no fight."

Many of the people outside had been attending a hip-hop party upstairs at the Que. The party was thrown by a mobile, disc jockey group called Deu2.

Brian Wright, Deu2's director, who was inside when the shooting occurred, said there had been no altercations during the party.

"Our policy is to search people before they enter," Wright said, "and we have our own staff of bouncers in the event that something were to happen."

OPPOSING SEX ACT POLICY

Planners hope film fest exposes homophobia

Brad Hahn
The Daily Iowan

Members of the UI Campaign for Academic Freedom will view "Taxi Zum Klo" and "Paris is Burning" today as part of their "Canned" film festival.

These two movies, along with a film shown in a UI art and art history class, have come under fire in the past two years. The controversy prompted the Iowa state Board of Regents to implement a policy requiring UI faculty and staff to warn students before sexually explicit materials are shown in the classroom.

The regents imposed the policy after UI faculty were unable to agree on the wording of its own policy.

Members of CAF hope through watching and discussing the films, they will expose the policy's homophobic basis and send a message of opposition to the regents, CAF member Josiane Peltier said.

"The sex acts policy that was forced on the UI stems from a climate of homophobia," she said. "No heterosexual films have been brought up. Some say that's a coincidence; I don't think so."

Regents President Marvin Berenstein said homosexuality is not the issue.

"Homophobia was never an issue, I stand firm on that, and I can speak for the entire board when I say that."

Marvin Berenstein, regents president

"I would have had the same attitude if it were a man and a woman," he said. "Homophobia was never an issue, I stand firm on that, and I can speak for the entire board when I say that."

Wednesday, the UI Faculty Senate will discuss its response to the policy. Berenstein said the Senate has three options: come back and ask the regents to revoke the policy, make its own policy or stick with the one the regents implemented.

CAF member Jean Fallow said the group will hold a rally before the Senate meeting and then walk to the Senate Chambers.

Despite the protests, UI Provost Peter Nathan said some sort of policy will be in place. The battle now, he said, is finding a compromise between the Senate and the regents.

"I don't think the regents are going to change their minds about this issue," he said.

There is no problem with CAF showing and discussing the films, Nathan said.

"As long as students who attend know what's going to happen, it's not a problem as far as I'm concerned," he said. He added that he might attend because he has yet to see the movies.

Fallow said CAF wants to keep the issue in the forefront and force the regents to revoke the policy.

"I don't think it's at all futile," she said.

DIVERSE ENROLLMENT UP

Minority graduation rates suffering at UI, ISU

Jim Snyder
The Daily Iowan

The UI's push to diversify the student population is making headway, but a report released Friday said the university needs to significantly improve graduation rates of African-American and Hispanic students.

"This is a problem nationally, but the University of Iowa and Iowa State University appear to do worse than comparable institutions," the report, which will be considered by the Iowa state Board of Regents Wednesday, states.

The UI has higher graduation rates for minority students, especially African-American students, than the other regent universities.

However, only about 40 percent of black students and 52 percent of Hispanic students graduate in six years. That compares with 62 percent of white students and 67 percent of Asian or Pacific Islander students graduating within that time period. For all students, 61 percent had graduated within six years.

Maya Gavin, president of the Black Student Union, said the Iowa City environment is not conducive to minority students.

"No one expects it to be the same as home, but there is nothing in the Iowa City community that makes us feel welcome," said Gavin, a senior from Joliet, Ill.

Many minority students are made to feel uncomfortable in class by insensitive or racist remarks by other students or faculty, she added.

The concerns are being heard and looked at, UI Provost Peter Nathan said.

"We're hearing minority students, and we're going to redouble our efforts to see what else we can do," he said. "I want this to be a university where all students want to go."

Nathan said the situation is under advisement, and he will receive a report of recommendations from Opportunity at Iowa before Christmas.

Minority enrollment has increased during the past 10 years at the UI, ISU and the University Professor Nora England, chairwoman of the anthropology department, poses with a phonetic wheel used to break down the sounds that compose languages. England has an interest in studying and preserving Mayan languages which are losing ground to the more modern Spanish language.

Saving the world's words

This UI professor tries to preserve Mayan languages and, therefore, keep a people's rich culture from fading into the past.

Holly Reinhardt
The Daily Iowan

June 10, 1993, was a good day for Nora England. The chairwoman of the UI anthropology department was in Guatemala when she received the news from Chicago — she had been selected as one of 33 winners of this year's MacArthur Foundation "genius grants."

"I was very excited," England said. "I was totally surprised and very emotional." England said the $285,000 award is somewhat of a cross between a grant and a prize that will help facilitate her future work — work which she hopes will save ancient language's that are under attack in today's world.

England explained the Mayan languages she works with are in danger of being phased out of use. Although Mayas make up about 60 percent of the population of Guatemala, the Mayan languages are being written and read less and less. All the schoolwork and public business of Guatemala is done in Spanish. On top of that, she said, the Mayas have a low literacy rate in any language so the preservation of their own languages becomes more difficult.

"It's a situation where formal education and literacy has been mostly unavailable to Mayas," she said. "I'm interested in promoting the use and preservation of the languages."

"The Mayas are vitally concerned with their own languages. Our language has never been under attack — they really care. It is part of their identity and life, and that makes it fun."

Traveling between the United States and Guatemala, England has spent the past 23 years of her life working to preserve Mayan languages. Of the family of 20 Mayan languages spoken in promote more projects by the group.

England said involvement with the Mayas has been very important to her.

"It is necessary to promote and cooperate with the Mayas," she said. "I would like to contribute as much as I can to the intellectual empowerment of Mayas. It is a situation where formal education and literacy has been mostly unavailable."

"It is very sad sometimes, but very exciting. I'm dealing with people in a situation in which they are being discriminated against."

England said the spirit and attitude of the Mayan people she has worked with have been important aspects of her relationship with them.

"They are very poor and economically disadvantaged. The opportunity to participate in class is never taken for granted," she said.

She takes these experiences with her into the classroom. "One thread that draws all of my work together is teaching," England said. "I'm trying to teach what I know, and I know language. Language is very complex, but we are able to acquire languages. It is a tremendous achievement only humans can do."

As a professor, England said it is important to extend her knowledge to her students.

"I'm trying to make it real for students here. I try to make people think a little about how our languages work," she said. "I would like to bring to the students here as much personalized knowledge as I can about another society."

"The most important thing is to try to share our specialized knowledge. It is important to make it available to people, our students in particular."

"I'm trying to teach what I know, and I know language. Language is very complex, but we are able to acquire languages. It is a tremendous achievement only humans can do."

Nora England, UI anthropology professor

Guatemala, England said she has worked with 13.

"I went to Guatemala in 1971; I had just finished my master's in linguistics and anthropology. I was there for two and half years, and have since established a long-term commitment," England said. "I thought it would be more interesting than more school."

England received her bachelor's degree from Bryn Mawr in Pennsylvania and her graduate degree from the University of Florida. Her projects have included working on the compilation of a comparative dictionary of all the languages of Guatemala, as well as working on a major project on the structure of words in the Mayan languages.

She currently helps fund a research group in Guatemala that was founded in 1990. She said she will use some of the grant money to

Real-life problem child strikes again

LAND O'LAKES, Fla. — When 3-year-old Mikey Sproul took his father's car for a joy ride last month and explained "I go zoom," the act grabbed national attention and even became fodder for late-night show monologue jokes.

But nobody's laughing now. Mikey torched his bedroom curtains with a cigarette lighter and burned down his family's home, authorities said.

"The wood burned," Mikey said as investigators picked through the ashes of Thursday night's blaze. "Now I have no more house."

As with his joy ride, Mikey escaped unharmed. He was brought out of the burning house by his father, 29-year-old Mike Sproul, who suffered second- and third-degree burns to his back, arms and hands. He was in serious condition Saturday at Tampa General Hospital.

The boy's mother, Paula Sproul, 32, wasn't home at the time.

Florida's Department of Health

"The wood burned. Now I have no more house."

Mikey Sproul, 3-year-old and Rehabilitative Services put Mikey into protective care Friday after receiving a complaint alleging "a lack of supervision" over the boy, said spokeswoman Elaine Fulton-Jones.

Neighbors, who describe the toddler as a smart child and "a handful," said the Sprouls moved into the house shortly before Christmas last year after their mobile home burned down.

Mikey, who will be 4 next month, became famous Oct. 1 when authorities said he sneaked into his parents' bedroom as they slept, climbed onto their dresser and snatched the car keys.

Authorities are unsure how Mikey drove the family car. At 2 1/2 feet tall, he can't reach the gas pedal and see over the dashboard at the same time.

Somehow, Florida Highway Patrol officials said, Mikey drove three-tenths of a mile down a busy highway at midnight and didn't hurt anyone, though he hit three parked cars, sideswiped another and ended up in a ditch.

BRANSTAD ADMINISTRATION CRITICIZED

Nagle unsure regarding run for governor

William Pepper
The Daily Iowan

Will he or won't he?
When former Iowa Congressman Dave Nagle spoke to students Friday in the City High Auditorium, the big question was whether he would challenge Iowa Attorney General Bonnie Campbell for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

The question was not answered. When asked directly if he would run, Nagle said he would "look at the data" and make his decision by the end of the month.

"It's an important decision, and it's a decision I weigh very heavily," Nagle said.

In response to a follow-up question regarding whether, if elected governor, he would take a whole month to make decisions then, too, Nagle said "no," adding that the decision to run for governor is too important to be made hastily.

"I'm just waiting. I'll get the data. I'll make the decision," he said. "If people get a little impatient with that, I'm not uncomfortable. It's an important decision, and we've got to do it right."

Nagle served three terms in the U.S. Congress from 1986 to 1992 and was defeated for re-election in 1992. This was Nagle's seventh visit to City High, tying the record set by U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley and U.S. Congressman Jim Leech.

The bulk of Nagle's talk centered on the Iowa economy. He criticized the Branstad administration for its "crazy doctrine" of "paying" businesses in other states like Minnesota and South Dakota to get them to build factories in Iowa.

Nagle said the $5 per hour part-time jobs these companies bring to the state are not what's needed to develop the economy. He cited statistics that 40,000 more Iowans have fallen into poverty this year, and in terms of median salary, the state ranks 44th, down from its ranking of 38th last year.

He added, however, that he would be willing to give tax breaks to businesses that bring good jobs to Iowa and agree to a long-term commitment.

On the related issue of keeping young people in the state, Nagle said Iowa should invest in a reform of Job Service to help people find jobs and put state money into creating new jobs "that require talent," such as in the insurance industry.

"We don't have a comprehensive program (to assist people in finding jobs) in this state. When you graduate, you're on your own," he said. "If Dave Nagle is governor, we will not put another dime in minimum wage jobs."

In response to another question, Nagle said he supports the welfare system but thinks recipients should be aided in finding jobs.

Nagle does not favor a ban on assault rifles because he said the root of the problem with guns goes deeper to drugs and alcohol.

"I know we want to believe that's the solution to crime, but it's not," he said. "In this state, one of the policies we should have is that everyone who has a drug problem should be treated as soon as they acknowledge they have a problem."

Nagle said the state should be tough on convicted criminals. He opposes the death penalty but advocates the expansion of prison facilities and life without parole as well as the idea of "three strikes," in which a person who receives a third felony conviction would auto-

David Greedy/The Daily Iowan

Nagle: no "hasty" decisions

atically go to prison for life.

"Our priorities should be to keep dangerous prisoners in prison," he said.

In national matters, Nagle said people should "give President Clinton a chance" because the transition from a long-time Republican administration to a Democratic one takes time. He also said he likes the idea of the North American Free Trade Agreement but doesn't like this particular plan.

Prison staff pickets unfair conduct policy

Maria Hickey
The Daily Iowan

Iowa prison employees represented by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees union held an informal picket Friday afternoon outside of the Iowa Medical Classifications Center to protest an off-duty conduct policy.

"We're out here today to send a message to the taxpayers," said Marty Hathaway, president of the AFSCME Local 2985. "Our time is our time. We work eight hours a day, not 24."

The policy, which was implemented in August 1992, allows disciplinary action or termination of state employees who abuse alcohol or drugs. Picketing prison employees feel the policy is intrusive and unfair.

They are especially upset about the hiring of a doctor whom the Iowa Board of Medical Examiners put on a five-year probation. An article in the Oct. 14 Des Moines Register said Dr. John Duffy, who is employed by the Iowa Department of Correctional Services, cannot treat female patients or prescribe or dispense controlled drugs due to previous abuse of alcohol.

Hathaway called Duffy's hiring a "slap in the face" and said other prison employees have not been treated fairly.

Departmental Director of Institutions Jim McHenry said all state employees are affected by the policy but especially those whose jobs have a direct link with drug and alcohol abuse. He said people hired are considered even if they have abused drugs or alcohol in the past.

"If they already did something in the past, we look at that," he said.

Former correctional officer Mike Bogs was terminated after being picked up for operating while intoxicated in June. After working at the center on the Oakdale campus for nine years, he said it was unfair he was terminated after a first offense.

"I got an OWI on June 20, and by June 22 I was terminated," he said. "They gave inmates more of a chance than me."

HABITAT FOR HUMANITY

Live-a-Thon focuses on plight of homeless

The 36-hour Live-a-Thon was held over the weekend in a shack near the downtown Pedestrian Mall.

The UI chapter of Habitat for Humanity sponsored a 36-hour Live-a-Thon this weekend in a small shack near the downtown Pedestrian Mall to raise awareness of the homeless' plight.

Students answered questions of passers-by and distributed literature from a diminutive wooden hut that stood as a representation of similar shelters constructed by the homeless.

UI sophomore Jim Newman, publicity coordinator for the organization, said response to the Live-a-Thon has been very positive.

"Some people are really naive about the homeless situation, and that scares me. But then again, there were other people that came by and wanted to help and that was great."

Melissa Deluna, UI freshman and participant in the UI chapter of Habitat for Humanity's Live-a-Thon.

"We've had an excellent reaction from the community," he said.

UI sophomore Anna Sorteberg, president of the UI chapter, said the dozen or so students who volunteered to participate this weekend gained a deeper appreciation of what it means to be homeless.

"We're only getting a taste of it this weekend," she said. "I couldn't imagine being homeless for any period of time."

help and that was great."

The students said many people offered to volunteer or to provide resources to help with the UI chapter's programs. These include journeys to other cities to help build houses and assistance to the Iowa City affiliate of Habitat for Humanity.

Mike Magnusson, a UI senior and member of the UI chapter, said he was struck by the response of a little girl visiting the stand with her mother when she was told some people did not have homes.

"She said 'Why?' — that's a pretty poignant question," he said. "That's something I think everybody needs to ask themselves — why people are homeless."

Jim Newman, a Habitat for Humanity volunteer, hands out information about the organization to UI freshman George Etre Sunday. Beginning at 6 a.m., Newman camped out in a hut located near the downtown Pedestrian Mall to raise awareness about homelessness.

BUDGET SHIFT PROVIDES FOR JOB

County supervisors add new position

Prasanti Kantamneni
The Daily Iowan

After weeks of debate, the Johnson County Board of Supervisors finalized its decision on hiring a new staff member at its meeting Friday.

With a vote of 3-2, the board approved the description and salary of the new staff position, which was detailed by the County Attorney's Office.

The full-time position will have an annual salary between $26,000 and $31,500, and will be titled "deputy administrative assistant." Advertising for the job will begin immediately, and the position may be filled by the beginning of January 1994, Chairwoman Patricia Meade said. Funding for the position will come from money left over from a previous part-time position and a shift within the board's budget, Meade said.

"It doesn't change the dollar amount in the budget," she said. "It's a lateral shift of money." Supervisors Joe Bolcom and Charles Duffy voted against the position. Both believed a $31,500 salary was too excessive.

Assistant County Attorney John Bulkely disagreed.

"It's unfair to pay people less than the work is worth," he said.

Supervisor Stephen Lacina said the board needs help immediately.

"I will support whatever it takes to get us help in this office, even if it takes $35,000," he said.

In other business, the board said it would look into rebroadcasting meetings on the radio after requests from county residents.

Early this year the board investigated televising the meetings but rejected the proposal due to high costs.

Resident Marilyn Simpson said radio broadcasting is a more viable and less costly action. More people would have access to the meetings since many people do not have cable television, she said.

Meade said she fully supports the idea and will investigate the option of rebroadcasting the meetings later in the day for easy public access.

ISU institute won't bar 'devious' from research

Associated Press

AMES — Iowa State University scientists said the new institute for physics will not likely help anybody develop nuclear weapons but that no attempt will be made to screen out work by "devious minds."

"If I were interested in that area, I would not come to Ames, Iowa," said ISU Provost John Kozak.

The new International Institute of Theoretical and Applied Physics will begin next July, bringing hundreds of scientists around the world to study and do research at existing ISU facilities.

David Albright, a physicist and president of the Institute for Science and International Security of Washington, D.C., said the ISU facility could be used by someone interested in developing weapons.

"Any theoretical physics institute is going to have a high capacity for research," including work on military technology, he said. Supercomputers at ISU could be useful for such work.

SURVEY SHOWS SIDES EQUAL

NAFTA foes within striking distance

Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Foes of the North American Free Trade Agreement seem a handful of votes shy of being able to kill the pact in Wednesday's House showdown, leaving President Clinton with an uphill but achievable fight to save the deal, an Associated Press survey has found.

With opponents of the agreement needing 205 votes to prevail, 204 representatives said they would vote against the measure or were likely to do so, the survey found. The figure included 179 who said they would vote "no," and 25 who said they were leaning that way. Arrayed against them were 179 supporters of NAFTA, which would phase out tariffs and other restrictions on trade among the United States, Mexico and Canada. Of these, 165 said they would vote for the agreement and 14 said they were likely to do so.

That left 51 undeclared lawmakers and a daunting task for Clinton and his congressional allies, who would suffer a major political setback should the pact be rejected.

Even if they retain all 14 representatives leaning toward the agreement, they will need the votes of 39 of the undecided, nearly four of every five. The measure will need a majority of votes to pass, which means 218 if everyone casts a ballot. There is one House vacancy.

Both sides in the battle exuded cautious confidence Sunday, based on their own secret surveys of sentiment.

"I see a horse race, a down-to-the-wire, hand-to-hand battle that will be decided during the vote," Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., a vote-counter for supporters, said Sunday. "My prediction is a narrow victory."

"I think we're going to win," House Whip David Bonior, D-Mich., a leading congressional opponent, said in an interview.

FACULTY PAY

compared to $34,499 per year for women in the same areas. For faculty, the average male salary in the professional colleges is $86,563 while the average female salary is $57,238.

For nonprofessional staff, men get paid an average of $14,000 more than women.

The higher increase for women was an attempt to be "pro-active" in situations where there was no clear reason why women were being paid less, Nathan said.

The average salary for nine-month faculty, including clinical faculty in the UI College of Medicine, is $80,416.

ENROLLMENT ACCIDENT

of Northern Iowa. Since 1983, total regent university minority enrollment has risen from 2,632 students to 4,411, a gain of 67.6 percent.

However, the progress made in recruiting minority students is undercut by the fact that 25 to 30 percent of African-American students leave the regent institutions within their first year, according to another report the regents will consider Wednesday. Another 12 to 17 percent leave after the second year.

The report comes after many African-American students have called for the UI to do more to retain minority students. The Coalition of Concerned African-American Students staged two protests in October and November calling on the UI to hire a specialist in minority affairs.

"If they're going to recruit minority students, honestly, they need to be more receptive to them culturally."

Maya Gavin, president, Black Student Union

Gavin said she went to a predominantly white high school, but the surrounding community provided her with various cultural activities. At the UI, she said, that is not the case.

"If they're going to recruit minority students, honestly, they need to be more receptive to them culturally," she said. "A lot of student activities, if they were, honest to God, more culturally diverse, you could get people to stay."

One way to increase retention, Gavin said, is to make a course in different cultures in today's society as attractive to students as the history of Western civilization seems to be. Another tactic would be to have more culturally diverse activities at the UI and to expand existing programs such as RiverFest or homecoming, making them more culturally diverse.

Among undergraduates at the UI, there are 591 Asian students, or 3.2 percent of the population; 428 African-American students, or 2.3 percent; 281 Hispanic students, or 1.5 percent; and 41 American Indian students, or 0.2 percent.

Among graduate students, there are 322 Asian students, or 3.7 percent; 298 African-American students, or 3.4 percent; 236 Hispanic students, or 2.7 percent; and 38 American Indian students, or 0.4 percent.

The ICPD has not yet determined the cause of the accident.

"I would say the speed was too fast for the conditions of the road," Kelsay said. "The roadway was still wet. Something happened to make him lose control of the vehicle and make him leave the roadway."

Although the examination of the vehicle has not been completed, there is no indication of something being wrong with the car.

"Until we get lab results, we cannot determine whether alcohol was involved," Kelsay said. "There was nothing in the car as far as alcohol containers. However, that definitely was not ruled out."

Scott Alford, a live-in pledge of Sigma Phi Epsilon, was one of the last persons to see Gates before the accident.

"He came up to see me before he left. He seemed absolutely fine to me," Alford said. "I don't know if he'd been drinking, but there was no way he was drunk."

SHOOTING

Wright doesn't think the person who was shot was at the party.

UI sophomore John Bacon, a Que bartender, said there was no atmosphere of conflict at the party, which was attended by around 200 people.

"It went really smoothly — there were no signs of trouble," Bacon said. "I'm sure the shooting must have been part of an isolated argument that started outside."

FILM SHOWING

Berenstein has received mostly positive feedback since implementing the policy.

"Most phone calls and mail have supported the regents," he said. "The only people that don't are some newspaper people and a few faculty people."

Alford said Gates will be missed in the house.

"He was one of the nicest guys I've ever met," he said. "Whenever someone dies, it seems like he becomes so much greater, but he really was one of the nicest guys. I'd say that now; I said that a week ago."

Alford said Gates' personality showed through little actions he did, like buying $10 worth of candy from little kids and passing it out to the fraternity members.

This was the first year Gates attended the UI. He previously attended the University of Maryland, where he wrestled competitively. Brian Kass, Gates' pledge educator, said he was planning to try out for the UI football team next semester.

"He lifted weights every day," Kass said. "He was going to compete in a body-building contest soon."

Mike Weast, a pledge brother of Gates, said he was in very good shape.

"He was a big guy, a mean-looking dude," he said. "We called him Cinder Block Heater, but when he walked in the room, his smile just lit it up."

Weast was the last person to see Gates Friday night.

"I watched him walk out the door, and I didn't realize I'd never see him again. I almost left with him," he said.

Sigma Phi Epsilon began flying its flag at half-staff Saturday morning. Chapter President Todd Binder said the fraternity is not yet sure what it will do in remembrance of him.

"We will do something," Binder said. "We don't know exactly what yet."

The wake will be held today from 6 to 8 p.m. The funeral is scheduled for Tuesday at 1 p.m. at a funeral home in Davenport.

"It's a big waste," Kass said. "He was full of energy, would do anything for you, an excellent student. He had everything going for him."

ment that started outside."

Bacon, who has worked at the Que for almost a year, said he and other employees were surprised by the incident.

"They've had these parties before, and there's never been any problems," he said.

Bacon dismissed speculation of the shooting being gang-related.

"These parties have an adult nightclub atmosphere," he said. "The people are older — not punk kids."

Bacon said he doesn't feel unsafe returning to work.

"If there were a party tonight, I'd have no reservations about working," he said. "We were all a little concerned last night, but that was because there was no way to see it coming."

The Iowa City Police Department is releasing no details of its investigation into the incident.

room 121 of Schaeffer Hall. Participants will then listen to a tape of the regents discussing the art and art history film. At 8:30 p.m., there will be a panel discussion with graduate and undergraduate students as well as faculty on the policy. At 9:30 p.m., "Taxi Zum Klo" will be shown.

CONSTITUTIONS

Before the law

Russia and South Africa are moving rapidly toward establishing new constitutions, even though they remain uniquely volatile nations. The struggles their citizens face in developing legitimate democracies should inspire us to reflect on our own system and wonder at the foresight of our political forbears. A crucial characteristic of our Constitution that the Russians and South Africans would do well to reproduce is its adaptability, its plasticity. While the United States is obliged to uphold basic principles of mutual respect and opportunity, it is not bound by the social context in which it was created and in which it has been amended. We are able to alter the Constitution without altering its intent.

We don't do it very often on a national scale, but the United States is one of the few nations that can admit its mistakes before they cripple the country. The Soviet Union could not admit its error until it was nearly extinct. South Africa can barely acknowledge its faults even now.

A nation which refuses to acknowledge its mistakes will collapse. If change is necessary, change will be achieved because survival is sometimes impossible without it. It is unfortunate that often severe damage must occur — connections and alliances irreversibly cut, ideals abandoned, perverted or destroyed — before those in control bother to rethink a current course of action and attempt to improve or correct that path.

The Russians and South Africans have already suffered immeasurably on the way to recreating their nations. Now is not the time for clinging to past hatred, past suspicion. In order for their countries to remain viable participants in the world community, the new Russian and South African constitutions must possess the forward-looking characteristics of our own. A nation that allows itself to be bound by the past will find itself hindered. No freedom exists where the past reigns, and a future based only on opposition to tired, discredited social structures is not a future at all.

The new Russia and the new South Africa should be new democratic nations, not Russia-without-communism and South Africa-without-apartheid. It would be like they never changed at all.

Northside, Bluffwood discussing options

To the Editor:

Several statements in Heather Pitzel's story, "I.C. residents differ on city road extension" (Nov. 1, DI), are in error either factually or by implication. This could have been avoided if she had interviewed a representative of the Northside Neighborhood Association, but she did not, although she was supplied with the name and phone number of at least one person to contact.

The Bluffwood and Northside neighborhood associations are not working in opposition to one another. Both organizations are dedicated to improving those things about our neighborhoods which are unacceptable to us and preserving those things which are good. We would not improve our own areas by harming other neighborhoods.

The NNA has not taken a stand on the possible extension of Scott Boulevard and / or First Avenue. We are aware that this project is likely to happen, and we are discussing it among ourselves. We are not interested in "accelerating" the city's work on this project; instead, we want to be informed in order to make a responsible and reasonable decision. If we do take a stand on this, it would amount to a suggestion to the city — we have no official power.

This street project is being created by the city, not the NNA, as implied in the story. Like Bluffwood, the Northside Neighborhood Association is aware of the already large amount of traffic on Rochester and First Avenue, much like other major arterials, Dodge and Governor streets, and we are sympathetic to the wishes of residents on those streets and to the safety of children attending schools located on those streets.

The NNA is not limited to Brown Street residents as the story suggested. The Northside includes about 1,500 addresses within approximately these bounds: Jefferson Street on the south, Clinton Street on the west, North Summit Street on the north end and Reno Street on the east.

No conflict

To the Editor:

The title of Heather Pitzel's article, "I.C. residents differ on city extension" (Nov. 1, DI), implies that significant differences of opinion exist between the Northside Neighborhood Association and the Bluffwood Neighborhood Association. This implication is reinforced in the article.

I write to inform you that this implication is wrong. The article distorted this issue as one of conflict between the two neighborhoods.

The Bluffwood Neighborhood Association realizes the traffic problems that the Northside neighborhood has on Dodge and Governor streets. Two logical solutions to this problem are the extension of First Avenue and Scott Boulevard.

The Johnson County Council of Governments' transportation planner Jeff Davidson, the Northside Neighborhood Association and the Bluffwood Neighborhood Association have all had open communications concerning the future plans of the extensions. We all have a common goal to make all of our streets as safe as possible. There is no conflict between the two Iowa City neighborhoods as the article implied.

Nin and latter-day domesticity

"I disregard the proportions, the measures, the tempo of the ordinary world. I refuse to live in the ordinary world as an ordinary woman. To enter ordinary relationships."

"I want ecstasy."
 "I'm a neurotic — in the sense that I live in my world."

"I will not adjust myself to the world. I am adjusted to myself."

In honor of the selective sensitivity that has overcome some state leaders, today's effort includes sexually explicit excerpts from the unexpurgated diaries of Anaïs Nin. It is unsettling material, beautiful and arousing, emotionally compelling. That is all the warning you get.

The passages were chosen to insult our assumptions that we are more civilized than our predecessors and to show that prissy claims to be able to turn passion on and off like a spigot indicate not so much the presence of a virtue as the sorry fact that our well has run dry.

I do not share Nin's taste in men, either particularly or generally. Henry Miller would not have been my idea of a hot date. Still, there is no use reading Nin as a feminist. One would be reduced to howling indignation by her willingness to subordinate her talent to Henry's as she supported him, gave him time and a place in which to write. I refuse that option. It is small and mean, beneath the level at which such decisions are made.

The duo lived passionately, loved copiously and openly, and wrote with the same fire that fueled the living. Henry loved June. June loved Anaïs after coming to despise Henry, who had grown to love Anaïs, too. Anaïs loved Henry and June. Hugo was married to Anaïs, who loved him as well, after her fashion. There were others. This was Nin's diary entry the day her lover and analyst, René Allendy, arrived at an encounter with a whip, which he proceeded to use on her:

"But I noticed this: his penis, after all this excitement on his part — lashes, struggles, caresses of fury, kisses on the breasts — was still soft. Henry would have been already blazing. Allendy pushed my head toward it, as the first time, and then, with all the halo of excitement, threats, he fucked no better than before. His penis was short and nerveless. Voluptuary!"

Later, she illuminates the encounter with the light of genius:

"What I hated today was, with Allendy, seeing through life as a drama which can be handled, dominated, tampered with — to feel that to know the springs of life is to destroy the essence of life, which is faith, terror, mystery. Today I saw the horror of wisdom. The mortal price one pays for it!"

"The question is: Have men died today because they have tampered with the sources of life, or did they tamper with the sources of life because they were dead and obtained an illusion of livingness from the handling of life?"

"Tonight I'm terrified."
 "I have walked through the universe of death. I was fucked by death!"

Then there was the father. Joaquin Nin was a pianist, a man of no mean amorous talent himself. Joaquin had left his family in Spain when Anaïs was a child. When they became lovers, it was like this:

"The next night, when he was a little freer in his movements and he lay over me, it was an orgy, and he penetrated me three and four times without pausing and without withdrawing — his new strength, new desire, and new spurt coming like waves following each other. I sank into the dim, veiled, unclimaxed joy, into the mist of caresses, languors, into continuous excitement, experiencing at last, profoundly, a passion for this man, a passion founded on awe, admiration."

Another time, it was like this:

"He observed that a stocking was wrinkled. Tightened my garter. The spectacle stirred him. He showed me his penis, tense. He asked me to lift my dress. I did so and began to undulate, moving as if in expectancy of a lancing. When we both could not bear the excitement any longer, we went to his room and he threw me on the bed and took me from behind."

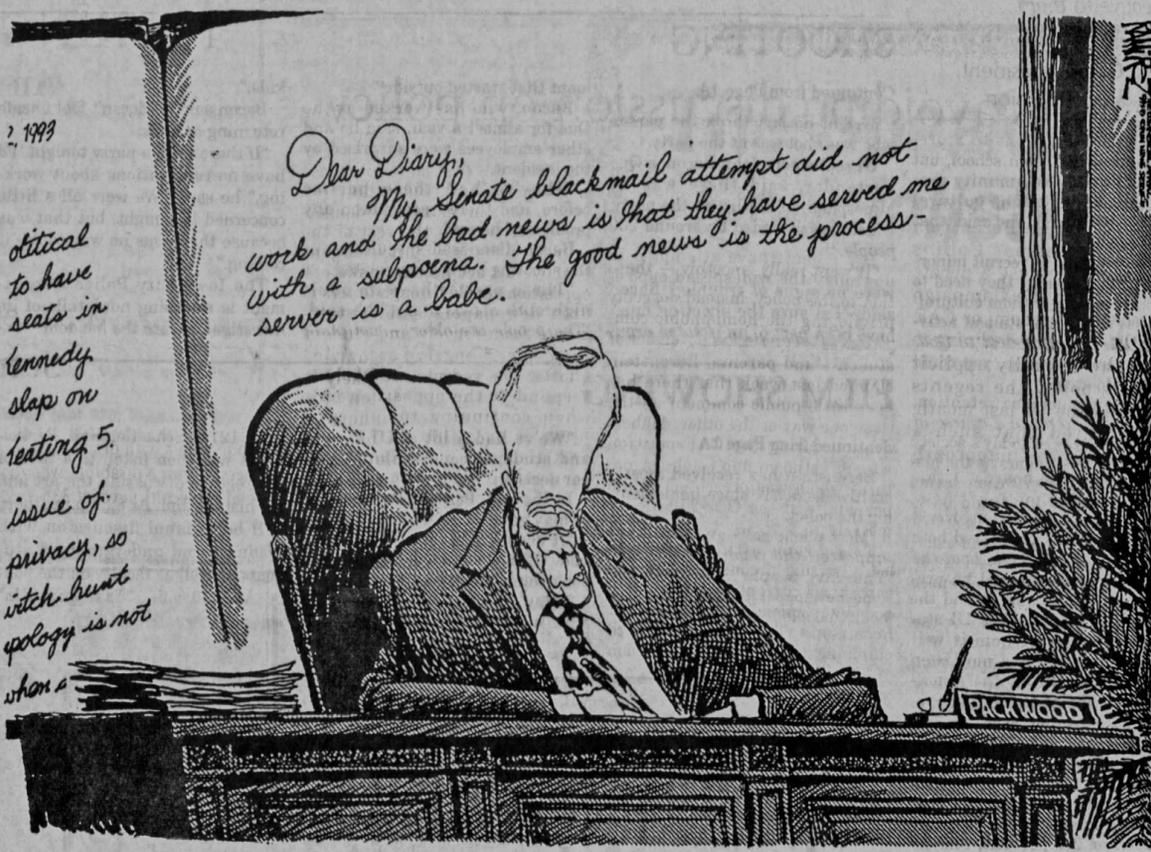

The point of this exercise is to demonstrate that, like it or not, Nin represents the apex of civilization. She manifests a perfect balance between the deliberate indulgence of our luxury to contemplate eternal questions (civilization's greatest gift) and a refusal to indulge in insipid, wasting obsessions with the niceties of herd morality (civilization's greatest peril).

That so many are offended rather than stirred by her gift is enough to tell us we have lost our way. This is not to say that we should seek incestuous affairs, but rather that we have grown so distant from our deeper selves, our deeper bodies and deeper spirits, that we care most passionately about those things that matter least. We squander the great gifts of civilization — our time and our minds — on the construction of a futile fortress of rules intended to repel reality.

As to our bodies, we deny them. We deny the words that signify what we do with them, we deny and repress the greater truths about what we want for them, and our institutions punish those who attempt to shine light into the tidy tomb in which we've buried everything, soaring they might have expressed. We have grown less, rather than more, civilized, and we deserve each of the myriad hells in which our fastidiousness lands us.

Cutting through the haze surrounding NAFTA

The war of words concerning the North American Free Trade Agreement reached a fever pitch last week with the debate between Vice President Al Gore and that gargoyled-looking dweeb, Ross Perot. The high-pitched whine coming from some Democratic constituency groups and their billionaire allies isn't likely to subside this week. Congress is preparing to vote on the pact, and it appears the Clinton administration has another squeaker on its hands.

For the last few weeks, I've been closely following the issue and trying to build on the understanding I've gained from reading nearly all the articles that have been written on the subject since Bush began negotiating the agreement. Paradoxically, the more I've read, the more I have become unsure of the facts, let alone the proper way to analyze those facts.

I've been leaning against NAFTA for most of the summer. Most chilling have been the unanswered charges that NAFTA forces the United States to give up significant portions of its sovereignty to an international tribunal made up of unelected bureaucrats from the three signatories. After all, it is a treaty negotiated by a Republican president with no principles and no compunction about lying, with added side agreements negotiated by a narrowly elected, draft-dodging, socialist president. A treaty produced during the decade of deceit, the disaster of the Bush-Clinton years, how could NAFTA be anything but a fraud?

This fall I've been taking a class in international economics which deals directly with trade issues. The professor is an adamant proponent of NAFTA and has often been quoted in the media linking the agreement with the theory of free trade. However good free trade would be for the U.S. economy, the fact is that NAFTA is not free trade. NAFTA is, at best, a managed trade treaty, but is more realistically called a highly bureaucratic, overcomplicated and overregulated trade treaty. At several thousand pages and four volumes, counting the side agreements, how could it be anything but complicated?

Even more confusing to me has been the proliferation of studies on job loss or job growth, many by reputable organizations, but all in total or partial disagreement. It seemed last week that the preponderance of evidence was on the side of those who believe in job growth, when the White House announced that every living Nobel prize-winning economist was in favor of NAFTA. Then an extreme anti-NAFTA group released a survey of these same economists who admitted that half had failed to read the treaty. Who knows how much of a "devil is in the details"?

I haven't read the treaty, but I think I've come to a fair conclusion based on our nation's self-interest and sound economic analysis.

NAFTA is the right medicine for the U.S. economy because it will lower the incentive to move factories to Mexico. Currently, the average tariff on U.S. goods exported to Mexico stands at 12 percent, and on some goods it's as high as 25 percent. The average tariff to import goods from Mexico is only 4 percent. In addition, the Mexican government has thrown up a formidable wall of red tape to prevent U.S. exports from entering their country. For example, the Mexican government requires U.S. automobile parts firms to import $1.75 in auto parts into the United States for every dollar of auto parts that they export to Mexico. Once NAFTA is implemented and the tariffs even out at 0 percent and all those stupid rules are gone, much of the incentive to move factories to Mexico will be gone.

NAFTA is also the right medicine for the environment along the U.S.-Mexican border.

For more than a decade, the United States and Mexico have had a de facto free trade zone going, as long as the goods were produced in Mexico within 10 miles of the border. The consequence of this project has been to concentrate Mexican industrialization in a strip very close to the United States where pollution from the laxly enforced Mexican environmental regulations can easily cross the border or foul shared waterways. The NAFTA treaty will allow Mexico to geographically disperse its future development, easing the environmental degradation of border areas in the United States.

Many NAFTA critics have made the argument that Mexico is so economically backward that we can't gain anything from increasing trade. Those critics, exemplified by Ross Perot, are obviously ignorant of the fact that gains from trade stem from differences in the prices of goods in the countries planning to trade. Besides, on the global scale, Mexico is not a poor country but a middle-class country. In fact, for several years the Mexican economy has been growing faster than either the U.S. or Canadian economies.

The most ridiculous argument made by NAFTA critics is their feigned concern over the plight of the common man in Mexico due to the country's political and social problems. The most important export of the United States is its ideas. In particular, Mexico will be radically changed by the ideas of human and individual rights that increasing trade will spread among a growing Mexican middle class. Tyranny and terror are more easily destroyed from within by the growing power of the people than from without by a meddling imperialist power.

NAFTA may not be perfect, but it's time to look at the incentives NAFTA brings to keep jobs at home and bring social change to Mexico.

Boundaries for free expression vary

I've often asked myself how I can disagree with the current drive among blacks at the UI to silence such things as the recent editorial cartoon containing Klansmen hanging a black man, which said, essentially, "Don't worry, mob violence is only a misdemeanor now," in reference to the recent acquittal of three black youths on attempted murder charges following their most brutal bludgeoning of Reginald Denny during last year's Los Angeles riots.

There are two reasons why my view on this matter may seem odd. First, I am part black. Second, I guess I'm not as much of a "free expression" advocate in the following areas: I am against the display of American Indian mascots (I am also part American Indian), and I support the Board of Regents' policy mandating a warning from class instructors before showing sexually explicit materials.

I'll do my best to explain my position, and being a law student, I'll try my best to stay away from legal analyses.

First, the cartoon is not necessarily racist, despite the initial impression some may have received. It seems to present issues which deserve debate on their merits. If there are legitimate reasons for objecting to the cartoon, as there are, then let's hear them, minus calls for greater "sensitivity" via censorship.

It is legitimate to compare the L.A. violence with Klan violence, as both rest on the premise of racially motivated mob violence. Likewise, it is legitimate to say that the parallel is inaccurate, as the Klan employs more systematically murderous motives and practices than did the three black youths who randomly, albeit racially, attacked Denny. Some have even called the Klan cartoon a veiled threat against blacks in response to the acquittal of Denny's attackers.

Hence, the principle and value of reasoned debate is revealed in this example. And it is not yielding of "insensitivity." Is everything that hurts our feelings an example of criminal insensitivity? Whether yes or no, if we debate things we don't like on their merits, we will invariably emerge more victoriously than if we cry censorship.

As to the second matter, namely my endorsement of the sex act warning policy and of prohibiting American Indian mascot displays, I find these consistent (or at least not inconsistent) with my opposition to censoring such things as the aforementioned cartoon.

First, the American Indian mascot displays yield no rational or socially redeeming insight. Such displays seem to hold no more purpose than: 1) to add "historical" kindling to the fires of competition which characterize and surround sporting events, and 2) to provide justification for the kind of moral apathy that prevents many from repenting for harboring patronizing, stereotypical or derogatory attitudes toward American Indians, under the guise of "fun" or "tradition." In other words, the "purpose" is nebulous in terms of value, though the effect is certainly quite hurtful.

In the classroom example, either students may be indelibly scarred by viewing sexually explicit material — which seems to lack redeeming educational value, if the examples thus far of such films shown in class are at all telling — that they did not plan on seeing, or they may feel compelled, for the sake of their grades, to stomach what they may deem disgusting. On top of that, instructors often impose their "enlightened, progressive" views upon students whom they force to watch such films, attempting to place guilt complexes upon dissenters. Such an environment is not conducive to academic freedom.

Sex has a way of gripping the heart and mind, and when it is appropriately treated — that is, with sacredness, care, respect and honor, and kept within blessed, consensual, heterosexual, marital bonds — the grip has a good effect. When sex is inappropriately treated — and this includes cheapening it, violating its sacredness by making it a spectator sport, employing it outside of consensual heterosexual marital bonds, and the like — the grip has a bad effect. Rape, incest, sexist attitudes, sexual harassment, sickened hearts and minds, and damaged relationships make for further proof.

I understand that injuries to the spirits and souls and hearts of many blacks were suffered upon viewing the cartoon in question. However, I believe healing can come through debate on the merits, when the given situation, involving something not necessarily racist in content, presents such an opportunity. Such debate may change hearts for the better. Conversely, though, American Indian mascot displays and sexually explicit class material may only rape the psyche of many an individual, and while debate helps here, it cannot erase indelibly harmful images.

GUEST OPINION • JEAN FALLOW

Regents avoiding discussion on policy

Iowa state Board of Regents President Marvin Berenstein and Regent Thomas Collins have chosen to refuse a debate challenge from the Campaign for Academic Freedom, or CAF. In his Oct. 26 letter declining to defend the sexually explicit materials policy the regents imposed on the UI last month, Collins stated that such a debate would be "inappropriate" and that the board's action simply "ends the matter."

Given the degree of controversy their decision has generated both on our campus and throughout the state, the regents should be prepared to stand up and defend the policy's merits before the UI students and faculty whom it will affect. The policy has now been roundly condemned by the American Association of University Professors, the Association of Big Ten Students, the UI Graduate Student Senate and even The Des Moines Register.

Regent Elizabeth Hendricks, responding in the Nov. 4 DI to the UI Faculty Council's less restrictive, alternate policy proposal, said, "the Council doesn't seem to understand how Iowa residents feel about the sex act policy." Her attitude is as absurd as it is dangerous. Carrying this reasoning to its logical conclusion, if Iowa residents who happened to be KKK members wrote the regents objecting to history classes' inclusion of material from a non-Eurocentric perspective, such material should then be required to carry a warning to protect the sensibilities of white, racist students. If others wrote in angrily claiming that the Holocaust was a myth, history and literature classes dealing with that period should then be required to give warnings to avoid offending anti-Semites.

The regents have attempted to downplay the widespread opposition to the policy, instead doggedly privileging the homophobic complaints of an undisclosed number of students and parents. Berenstein claimed last week that there has been little public comment on the issue one way or the other, deliberately ignoring the CAF petition with 927 student and faculty signatures which was presented to him personally at the Oct. 20 regents' meeting.

This myopic attitude becomes less puzzling if considered in the context of current efforts nationwide by reactionary groups like Pat Robertson's Christian Coalition to eliminate any classroom discussion of ideas or lifestyles that do not conform to their own peculiar definition of normality.

For example, Young Americans for Freedom Chairman Keith Chivetta was in attendance at the regents' meeting this spring, flanking student Melissa Chase as she testified against the Franklin Evans video shown to her Art Colloquium class. YAF's 1989 policy statement, dedicated to "Uncle Joe" (McCarthy), reads, "Now that the FBI and the CIA can no longer monitor professors in the classroom, it is our job to do so." Gov. Terry Branstad, who appoints the regents, is himself a former member of YAF.

If the current policy is allowed to stand, other "undesirable" ideas and disciplines like Marxism, feminism, post-structuralism and African-American studies may ultimately be targeted for outright elimination from college curricula.

Iowa is the first state to impose such a policy on its public universities, setting an extremely dangerous precedent for the rest of the country. This is why it is urgent that we all act now to make our opposition visible through letters to area newspapers, public statements from faculty and student groups, and ongoing organizing efforts. The regents are likely to respond to the opposition only when continuing to ignore it becomes more difficult than it is worth, and this result can only be achieved through concerted, organized and public pressure.

CAF's next event will be a "Canned Film Festival" today in room 121 of Schaeffer Hall, featuring the films and videos which sparked the current debate and which TAs have been reprimanded for showing. "Paris is Burning," a highly acclaimed documentary about drag queens in New York, will be shown at 6:30 p.m. It will be followed at 8 p.m. by footage of this spring's regents' meeting which art TA Megan O'Connell was required to attend but at which she was not allowed to speak in her own defense. At 8:30 p.m. there will be a panel discussion among CAF representatives, faculty and the audience. The final feature will be the German film "Taxi zum Klo," to begin at 9:30 p.m. Since the Faculty Senate is to meet the following day, this will be an ideal time to come out and show your support for academic freedom.

For more information or to join CAF's efforts, stop by our literature table Mondays in the Union, or call 339-5481 or 338-8611. Jean Fallow, the author of this guest opinion, is co-chairwoman of the Campaign for Academic Freedom and a graduate student in comparative literature.

While waiting for results from the nonbinding plebiscite, supporters of commonwealth status for Puerto Rico gathered outside the Popular Democratic Party headquarters Sunday. Puerto Ricans turned out heavily to vote their preference for the status quo, independence or U.S. statehood.

Puerto Rico votes down statehood

David Beard
Associated Press

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Supporters of continued commonwealth status for Puerto Rico prevailed at the polls Sunday over those who wanted statehood, turning back the strongest movement this century for full union with Washington.

"The people spoke, and I will obey them," said Gov. Pedro Rossello, who spearheaded the statehood campaign, in acknowledging defeat to a speech of thousands of supporters.

But he added, "This is a struggle that will go on."

With votes counted from 89 percent of the precincts — 1,582 of 1,784 — official results showed continuing commonwealth status receiving 740,892 votes, or 48.5 percent; statehood 707,314, or 46.3 percent; and independence 66,915, or 4.4 percent.

Thousands of commonwealth supporters filled the streets and started a blocks-long caravan. One of the celebrants, Nereida

Rodriguez of the central city of Caguas said commonwealth changed the poor, sugar-farming island into an industrial success, and she was forever grateful.

Screaming over salsa music and honking horns, Rodriguez, 56, said, "We've affirmed that we're Americans — but we're Puerto Ricans, too. We have our own separate Olympic teams, our own Puertoricaness."

Political status has been debated here almost since the moment U.S. troops captured the Caribbean island in 1898, ending four centuries of Spanish rule.

Celeste Benitez, campaign director of the pro-commonwealth Popular Democratic Party, credited the heavy turnout of more than 70 percent to a party campaign of calling 20,000 supporters a day to bring out the vote.

Commonwealth supporters expressed a reluctance to begin a long campaign to seek statehood, fearing closer ties with Washington would lead to destruction of the island's culture and threaten the use of Spanish, the sole language spoken by 60 percent of the island's 3.8 million residents.

The commonwealth victory may stall the recent momentum toward statehood. Puerto Rico became a commonwealth with some autonomy in 1952.

But Rossello charged that the narrowness of the loss was an indication that his movement is gaining. The vote, he said, "came closer to the truth than ever before."

The race was closely watched by District of Columbia residents, also in line for statehood, as well as the U.S. mainland's 22 million Hispanics, 2.6 million of them Puerto Rican.

In the last plebiscite on status in 1967, 67 percent of voters opted to maintain commonwealth, known in Spanish as "free associated state."

Warm weather hospitalizes 56 in NYC Marathon

NEW YORK (AP) — Two runners with body temperatures of about 108 degrees were removed by helicopter Sunday from the finish area of the New York City Marathon.

The day's unusually warm weather — 70 degrees and 61 percent humidity when the top runners crossed the finish line at 1 p.m. EST — caused 27 people to be taken to hospitals from the course and another 28 from the finish area, said Gus Pappas, a spokesman for the Emergency Medical Service.

Pappas said two runners were evacuated by helicopter after ice baths failed to revive them. He said they were unconscious at the time they left Central Park for Bellevue Medical Center and had hyperthermia.

The runners, both men, were in critical but stable condition Sunday evening, said hospital spokesman Larry Dugan.

Texas A&M meets with NCAA officials

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Texas A&M officials spent Sunday morning with the NCAA, explaining what they knew about football players getting paid for work that wasn't done, and when they knew it.

The meeting with the committee on infractions lasted 4½ hours, shorter than most enforcement proceedings.

"It was a very good, fair hearing," Texas A&M interim chancellor E. Dean Gage said.

Cash payoffs to athletes, even when disguised in phony employment scams, are considered major violations and could result in the fourth football penalty in the checkered NCAA history of the Aggies, ranked No. 10 in The Associated Press poll.

In a 1,227-page response filed prior to the meeting, however, Texas A&M said it is innocent of violations and should not be held accountable for the nine players involved.

Sheehan inducted into Hall of Fame

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Patty Sheehan became the 13th golfer inducted into the LPGA Hall of Fame during a ceremony here Saturday night attended by many of her peers.

The 37-year-old has won 31 tournaments in a 13-year career on the LPGA tour. Thirty career wins are needed to qualify for the Hall of Fame.

"I never thought of myself as that type of player," she said at a news conference before the invitation-only induction ceremony at the Reno Hilton. "But I guess I have to start to think that way. It's a very humbling experience."

Among the 470 guests at the event were women golf stars of past and present, including Beth Daniel, Juli Inkster, Meg Mallon, Pat Bradley and Patty Berg.

Also attending were John Sununu, former President Bush's chief of staff, and his wife, Nancy.

Sheehan has amassed $4 million in career winnings.

The Iowa field hockey team gave a "total team effort" to earn its second consecutive trip to the Final Four.

The second-seeded Hawkeyes held off Northwestern, 2-1, Sunday at Grant Field to win the Midwest Regional Championship.

"Everybody stepped up. People did what they needed to do, and they didn't try to do it alone," Iowa coach Beth Beglin said. "They did it as a team."

Iowa will play No. 3-seeded Maryland Saturday in semifinal action at Rutgers University in Piscataway, N.J.

Senior back Aimee Klapach came up with the Hawkeyes' first goal of the day on a penalty stroke after a Wildcat defender came into contact with the ball on an Iowa short corner. Klapach converted on the one-on-one opportunity to give Iowa the advantage.

Northwestern took control for the next six minutes and capitalized on an unassisted shot by Gretchen Scheuermann to tie the game.

For more field hockey coverage, see Page 3B.

"We really did let down after we scored," Klapach said. "We let them come right back down after we put a goal in. That is something we really do need to focus on is, after we score, keeping the pressure on and keeping the ball up in their right-hand corner."

Ann Paré, a sophomore from Southbury, Conn., put in the game-winner with an unassisted hit at 4:42 in the first half.

Beglin said she was worried in the first half because she thought her team was playing "not to lose," instead of playing to win.

"When you play not to lose it's going to bite you," she said. "We were lucky after they scored to come back in a short amount of time and be able to put the ball in. That was competitive spirit."

The second half was all Iowa. While Northwestern had one short corner, the Hawkeyes had eight. Although Iowa didn't capitalize on any of them, Beglin said the corners worked to wear down the Wildcats.

"What I think the team did a really good job with was, regardless of the outcome of the penalty corners, they continued to put the pressure on. They got corner, after corner, after corner," she said.

Iowa had 24 shots on goal and 13 penalty corners, while Northwestern had 4 shots and 2 corner opportunities. Hawkeye goalie Jessica Krochmal saw little action, picking up just one save. The Wildcats' Shannon Small recorded 13 saves.

"The defense really shut Northwestern down. They did not have a lot of opportunities," Beglin said.

Earlier this year, Northwestern handed Iowa a 2-0 loss Oct. 9 before the Hawkeyes came back to shut out the Wildcats, 3-0, Oct. 30. Paré said Iowa knew the deciding game would be a tough one.

"This is everybody's goal, to get to the Final Four, and they were hungry for it, just as we were. The goal of the game was to beat them to the ball and if we could outthrust them, we'd do it," she said.

"It was a total team effort today," Klapach said. "Everyone really stepped up from every place. When we have games like that, that's when we can put it together."

Iowa kept alive its winning streak at home, raising the mark to 39 games.

FOOTBALL

A bowl for the Hawks?

Roxanna Pellin

The Daily Iowan

EVANSTON, Ill. — There are two topics the Iowa football team has avoided lately: Coach Hayden Fry's 200th career win and the possibility of going to a bowl game.

With a 23-19 win over Northwestern Saturday at a windy Dyche Stadium, the Hawkeyes can no longer ignore either issue.

Sophomore tight end Scott Slutzker said the Hawkeyes are thinking about Fry's 200th win and a bowl game, but nobody's talking.

"Nobody really likes to bring that up," Slutzker said. "It's kind of a taboo thing, it's like a jinx. I'm sure it's going to be brought up a lot this week. Maybe nobody wanted to bring it up before because we still had a couple games left. Now it's coming down to the last game and it's going to be No. 200 for him. I think we're going to use that a lot."

The Hawkeyes improved to 5-5 overall and 2-5 in the Big Ten while the Wildcats dropped to 2-8 and 0-7. A win over Minnesota (4-5, 3-3) next Saturday at Kinnick Stadium will give Fry his 200th win and perhaps put the Hawkeyes into contention for a bowl game invitation.

Northwestern went into the game without its starting quarterback, senior Len Williams, who was sidelined with a rib injury. Williams had started 42 games straight for the Wildcats prior to the Iowa game. Backup sophomore Steve Schnur completed 15 of 30 passes for 202 yards, a touchdown and an interception. He was sacked five times for a loss of 27 yards and had eight passes broken up.

Wildcat coach Gary Barnett said he didn't know if having Williams healthy would have made the difference for the win.

"I think Williams' experience and his ability he's demonstrated so far probably would have helped our situation," Barnett said. "I don't want to take anything from Iowa. I wouldn't say, 'We didn't win the ball game because we didn't have Williams.' I think our chances probably would have been better, they always are when you play your starters."

A southwest wind of 25 mph factored into both quarterbacks' performances, but Barnett said Schnur has some things to learn.

"I think Steve had some trouble technique wise throwing the ball. We had the ball batted down a number of times, it's just a matter of not releasing the ball. He has to get used to that. We went the wrong way once or twice, and I guess that's rookie mistakes. You have to play through those."

For more football, see Page 4B.

Iowa quarterback Paul Burmeister completed 17 of 25 passes for 234 yards and one interception. Burmeister threw a 3-yard touchdown pass to Slutzker to put the Hawkeyes ahead 13-6 going into halftime. The second quarter drive covered 80 yards in eight plays and 1 minute, 22 seconds.

"It was into the wind. We were up 6-0, we were front-runners. That drive was crucial to the outcome of the game," Barnett said.

Fry said the no-huddle offense before halftime was the "key to the game."

Burmeister said that's the kind of situation he loves.

"Coach Fry says, 'OK, two-minute offense' and the offense is

The Iowa men's cross country season came to an end Saturday as the Hawkeyes finished 10th out of 29 teams at the NCAA District IV meet at Bloomington, Ind.

Herd took the lead with 400 meters to go, but was passed by Sullivan in the last few meters, Wieczorek said.

The Aurora, Colo., native appears to be coming along according to his schedule. In prior seasons, Herd felt that he peaked physically too early in the season. This season he has been trying to peak late in the season and Wieczorek thinks that he's still improving.

"He was fifth at the Big Ten meet and second at the district. He still has one more week to get better," he said.

Going into the meet, Herd's only goal was to qualify for the national meet.

"I didn't try too hard to win the race. With about half of the race to go I was in fourth and before I knew it, I was in the lead. I started to think to myself, 'Hey, I can win this thing.' Unfortunately though, I couldn't hold the lead," Herd said.

Herd said he didn't make any aggressive moves during the race,

Pennington leads Hawkeyes past Hoosiers

Doug Alden
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's swimming team improved its record to 3-2 Saturday, beating Indiana 173-128 in a dual meet at the Field House Pool.

Tri-captain Allison Pennington continued her strong start this season with first-place finishes in the 100-meter breaststroke with a time of 1 minute, 6.37 seconds, the 200 breaststroke (2:21.67) and the 200 individual medley (2:08.34).

Liane Burton, also a captain, took first place in the 100 freestyle (52.64), the 100 butterfly (57.93) and was part of the winning 400 freestyle relay team, joining fellow captain Laura Borgelt, Nicole Widmyer and J.J. DeAth (3:31.77).

Coach Pete Kennedy was pleased with the Hawkeyes' performance.

"I couldn't ask for anything more. We had to come out and swim really well. We just had to have a solid meet today and we did that," he said.

VOLLEYBALL

Hawks frustrated after home stand

Joel Donofrio
The Daily Iowan

After taking a 2-0 lead over Wisconsin Friday night, the bottom fell out for the Iowa volleyball team, as the Hawkeyes suffered two "really frustrating" 3-2 defeats against the Badgers and Northwestern this weekend at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Iowa's 10-15, 15-17, 15-13, 15-13, 15-9 setback to Wisconsin came after the Hawkeyes blew a 12-9 lead in game three and an 11-5 lead in game four. Iowa coach Linda Schoenstedt said her team's inability to close out the Badgers was due to a lack of killer instinct.

"It just seemed like mentally the players were spent. They weren't physically tired — we kept asking them — but mentally we were just spent," Schoenstedt said. "To me, that translates to a lack of killer instinct; and until they learn how to win, and learn to do whatever it takes to win, we're going to be in trouble."

"We just needed somebody to step up and lead (Friday) and nobody did. I expect that (leadership) from our seniors and we just didn't get it," she added.

Iowa jumped out to a 2-0 lead behind a deluge of kills from senior Erin Weaver (a career-high 29 for the match) and freshman Jennifer Webb (23 kills, 22 digs). However, after letting Wisconsin off the hook in games three and four, the Badgers (15-11 overall, 8-7 in the Big Ten) dominated in the rally game behind hitters Brigitte Lourey (34 kills) and Joanna Grotenhuis (26 kills). Lourey's three straight kills put Wisconsin ahead 5-1. Grotenhuis's two straight kills helped widen the gap from 9-5 to 13-5, and an Iowa error gave the Badgers the game and the match, 15-9.

The Hawkeyes' game-five difficulties continued Saturday night against Northwestern (12-14, 5-11), as Iowa (11-17, 3-13) lost 15-3, 12-15, 15-9, 7-15, 15-6 before a season-high, Girl-Scout-Night crowd of 632. The Wildcats started out red-hot, winning game one quickly before the Hawkeyes came back to win game two on a kill by Jill Oelschlagel, who had a career-high 24 kills for the night.

Schoenstedt attributed her team's slow start, in part, to the tough defeat the previous night.

"I decided I was going to stay very patient in the first game, knowing that there was going to be some fallout from the night before," she said. "As it turned out, we came back and did a nice job in the second game."

ish, Wiczorek was happy with the performance.

"Cracking the top 10 at the district meet is a step forward for the program," Wiczorek said. "Our guys had a respectable performance and they have nothing to hang their heads about."

David Greedy/The Daily Iowan

Iowa's Erin Weaver bumps the ball in the third game of Northwestern's 3-2 win over the Hawkeyes Saturday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Schoenstedt also said the Hawkeyes played well in the fourth game, which they won to even the match at 2-2. Senior Courtney Gillis had many of her nine kills and 22 digs in game four, which the Hawkeyes won 15-7 on a Weaver service ace. But game five was all Wildcats, as the jump serving and offensive attack of Molly Maloney and several Iowa hitting errors and net violations gave Northwestern the game and the match.

Once again, Schoenstedt questioned her team's lack of mental toughness and propensity for committing errors following the defeat.

"We were loose, we were ready to take off, but I think we made some critical — no, we made the mistakes in game five. I think every hitter had an error, and that translated into six points," Schoenstedt said. "We told the kids coming into this weekend that we had to reduce errors. We've had to do that all year, but particularly in the fifth game, when an error is a point against you."

"Once again, in the fifth game, we had no leadership, and that's very frustrating," she added. "You know, somebody has got to step up. We know where we would like it to come from, but it isn't happening."

Iowa will return to competition Dec. 2 when it travels to Ann Arbor, Mich., for the U.S.S. Open.

Hawks' hard work pays off

Kris Wiley
The Daily Iowan

The Hawkeyes have come a long way.

"We started out as a young team, young insofar as playing together," senior Aimee Klapach said. "I think we knew every time we got out on the field, and our goal every time we got out on the field, was to improve. If we did that, we knew that it would take care of itself."

Iowa's hard work has turned into its second straight Final Four appearance, following a 2-1 win over Northwestern in the Midwest Regional final Sunday at Grant Field.

"You had to see the first couple of days of preseason practice to appreciate where they've come from," Hawkeye coach Beth Beglin said. "We had some real big holes that we had to fill and our team did a really good job allowing younger players to be able to get their feet under them without experiencing a lot of pressure."

Following the 1992 season, when

Iowa went undefeated until the NCAA Championship game, a 4-0 loss to Old Dominion, the Hawkeyes had to change their way of viewing the season.

"This year's team really tried to focus on one game and one practice at a time and not looking ahead or beyond to anything," Beglin said.

The team had its ups and downs during the season, including what Beglin called the "low point," Iowa's 2-0 loss to Northwestern Oct. 9. The defeat was the third for the Hawkeyes on the season, the most losses an Iowa team had suffered since it went 20-4 in 1990.

"We've had some real highs and lows this year and that was probably the low point of the season, because it really put in doubt whether we would be able to go somewhere," Beglin said.

"I can honestly say I'm extremely proud of this year's team. They've done a terrific job bouncing back from things. It would be really easy to get discouraged. They didn't get down and they used each game as a learning experience," she said.

Since the loss to the Wildcats, Iowa has gone 9-0, including revenge wins against Northwestern and Penn State, who beat the Hawkeyes 1-0 Oct. 3.

Maryland is the other team that beat the Hawkeyes, handing them a 2-1 loss Sept. 18. While Beglin said it would be nice to meet the Terrapins, it doesn't matter who Iowa plays.

"We've really tried to focus this year on controlling things we have control over and that is how we play and what we do on the field," she said.

The Hawkeyes are 19-12 in post-season competition and have advanced to the Final Four six times in the last seven seasons, winning the championship in 1986.

And they aren't ruling out the possibility of a second title for the school.

"If we continue to play as strong as we have, have the confidence, maintain the poise that we have and have good, intense practices, I think we have as good a chance as anybody," Ann Paré said.

Independence Bowl looks at Iowa

Roxanna Pellin
The Daily Iowan

EVANSTON, Ill. — Ron Holland liked the little he saw of Iowa's 23-19 win over Northwestern.

The Independence Bowl representative arrived at the Iowa game with just three minutes left after his flight was delayed, but that was enough for Holland to see the black and gold of the Hawkeye fans scattered among the 33,390 in attendance at Dyche Stadium.

"You look at everything, besides record, who they beat, are they on a roll or are they going downhill? There's a lot of factors that go into it. The primary one is the fan support, besides the record and qualifying with the six wins," Holland said.

"Most every school has a reputation for fan support, regardless of what their record is for the year. It's not like 'Get on the band wagon' type deal. This has been something that's been going on at Iowa for a long time."

Virginia Tech accepted an Independence Bowl invitation Saturday following a 45-24 win over Syracuse. The Independence Bowl will be played at 12:30 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 31, New Year's Eve. Holland said it will be televised on ESPN, the only bowl game that day.

Schreveport, La., the site of the Independence Bowl, is about a 12-hour drive for Iowa fans. Holland said he hoped Iowa would bring 5,000 fans if the Hawkeyes got the bid.

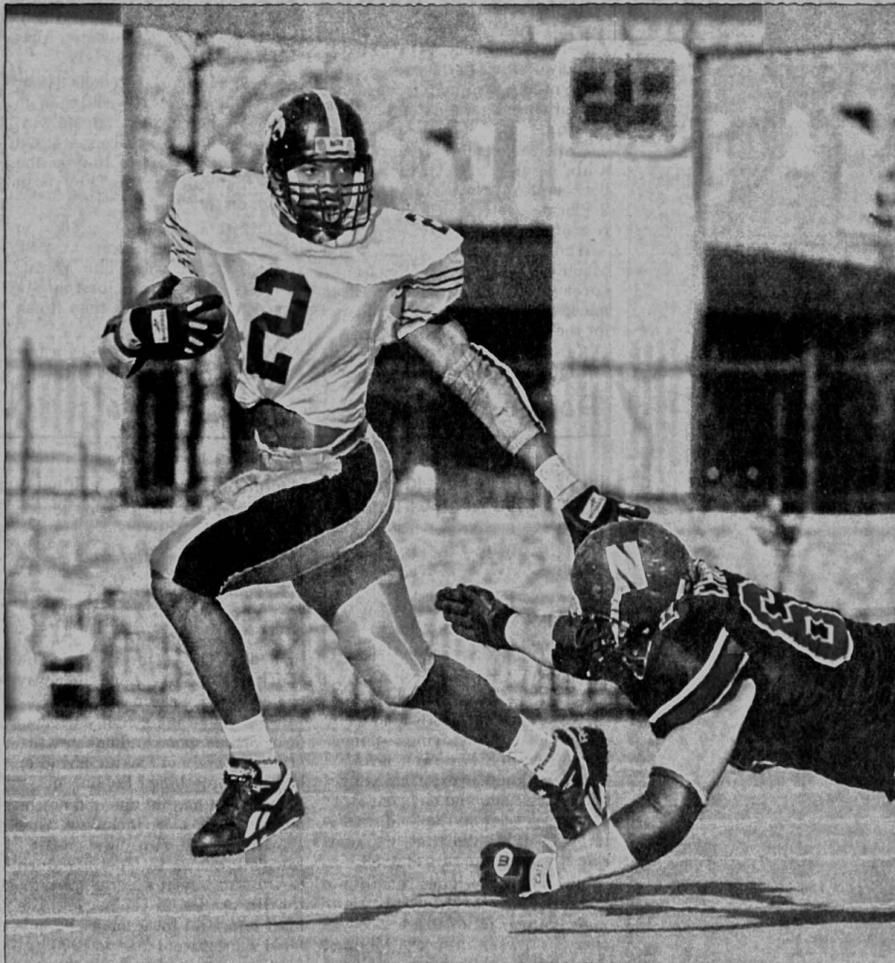

"That's usually a benchmark that we look for when we consider them as a good school to come. The probability of 5,000 people flying in from Boston would probably be irrelevant because we don't have that much air traffic. We consider (Iowa) a regional team."

Holland listed five teams besides Virginia Tech that were still in consideration Saturday: Indiana, Cincinnati, Memphis St., Clemson and LSU.

Indiana lost to Ohio State, 23-17, while Cincinnati, Memphis St. and Clemson all won. LSU had the week off.

The Tigers were No. 1 in the running, Holland said.

"Based on how the number's crunched out, the scenario as I understood it is that Georgia had to beat Auburn in order for LSU to qualify. I don't think that happened. I think that will take LSU off our list, but I'm not sure."

Auburn beat Georgia 42-28 Saturday.

Holland said the selection committee has "been talking Big Ten all year. "We might take Iowa at 6-5 before we would take a team at 8-3 that didn't have any fan support or who wouldn't bring anybody."

Iowa coach Hayden Fry said he's just thinking about next Saturday's Minnesota game.

"College football is so screwed up today because there's so much parity," Fry said. "There's so many teams that have good won-loss records that are going to be eliminated because they don't have six victories against Division I teams. Normally a 6-5 team goes to a bowl game."

"Everything we do at Iowa this year, we have to fight like it's the end of the world."

yours," Burmeister said. "You go out there and call your own plays. Like I said, as a quarterback that's the situation you've got to thrive on and love."

The Hawkeyes gained 90 yards rushing, and fullback Cliff King had 69 yards on 14 carries. In Iowa's last touchdown series, King ran for gains of 14, 12, 11 and five yards.

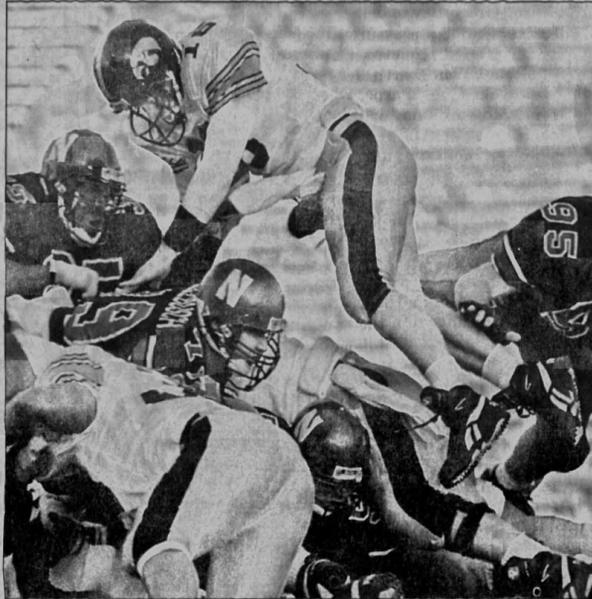

"Cliff King did a heck of a job," Fry said. "It's a shame he didn't score a touchdown. He got it down to 2-inch line and we decided to run a quarterback sneak rather than let him carry it on in."

But King said he was satisfied with the carries he did get.

"I had no idea I'd get this many," King said. "I'm glad the offensive line opened up the holes and gave me room to run."

Junior running back Dennis Lundy led the Wildcats with 137 yards on 35 carries and a 3-yard touchdown run.

"Our plan was we had to win the ball game with Dennis," Barnett said. "While we did rush for some yards, we were still not effective as we needed to be to win the ball game. The wind was a real factor in the whole game. But I felt like we survived the quarters we were going into the wind pretty well. When it's on the line, we just can't pull the trigger."

T. Scott Krenz/The Daily Iowan

Iowa quarterback Paul Burmeister carries the ball for seven yards for a first down. The series ended in a touchdown, giving Iowa a 20-6 lead in the third quarter of a 23-19 win over the Wildcats.

WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY

Hawkeyes finish sixth

Mike Egenes
The Daily Iowan

When the Iowa women's cross country season began, Coach Jerry Hassard thought his team would be headed to its fifth consecutive appearance at the NCAA national meet.

The Hawkeyes had that bubble burst at the NCAA District IV meet Saturday at Bloomington, Ind. Iowa finished a distant sixth with 212 points, ending its season.

Michigan won the event with 40 points and Notre Dame finished second with 78. Both teams qualified for the national meet Nov. 22 at Bethlehem, Pa. Michigan's Molly McClimon and Courtney Babcock finished first and second overall to lead the Wolverines.

Finishing behind Michigan and Notre Dame were Wisconsin (123), Minnesota (144), Illinois (195) and Iowa.

Iowa, which has been riddled with personnel problems for much of the second half of the season, was without two of its top runners — Sara Murray and Christine Salsberry — for Saturday's competition. Salsberry did not travel with the team and Murray was scratched from the lineup late last week with a "hip-back complication."

In addition, junior Erin Boland was hampered with an aggravated arch and "had to run flat-footed," Hassard said.

But Hassard didn't want to use the injuries as a scapegoat.

"All of these things seem to flare up when things aren't going well. We're obviously not pleased to lose (Salsberry and Murray), but we could have run much better than we did."

"I don't want to make excuses — our performance needs a lot of work," Hassard said. "We're just not running fast enough."

Senior Tina Stec, who finished 37th overall at the Big Ten meet two weeks ago, was the top runner for Iowa. She came in 13th with a time of 18 minutes, 47 seconds.

"It was disappointing to finish sixth. Notre Dame was stronger than we had expected, but not everybody had their best meet," Stec said.

Stec thought the absence of Salsberry and Murray was a liability to the team's frame of mind.

"It kept chipping away at our confidence. Only so many of those things can happen before it catches up with you," she said.

Also finishing for the Hawkeyes were Jennifer Schoonover (34th; 19:22), Kiersten Pauling (48th; 19:45), Erin Boland (59th; 19:48), Becky Coleman (66th; 19:50) and Natalie Kleinfelter (140th; 20:57).

Hassard thought the team's performance was far from championship running.

"If we're going to aspire to race at the national meet, we'll have to perform much more consistently," he said. "We need top performances from everybody."

Martinez upsets Graf for title

Ted Duncombe
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Steffi Graf wasn't at her best and Conchita Martinez seized the opportunity.

"Against me, she's usually unbelievable all the time," Martinez said Sunday after beating Graf 6-3, 6-3 in the championship match of the Virginia Slims of Philadelphia.

The victory was Martinez's first over Graf in 10 career meetings.

Seeded second and ranked No. 4 in the world, Martinez targeted Graf's backhand in the corners and charged the net to claim the $150,000 top prize.

Graf made 34 unforced errors to Martinez's 24 and was able to convert only one of six break points.

Martinez broke her opponent's serve in eight chances.

Martinez this year became the first Spaniard to win the Italian Open since 1930.

Chiefs running back Marcus Allen dodges Raiders cornerback Torin Dorn during the first quarter of Kansas City's 31-20 win over Los Angeles Sunday. Allen gained 85 yards on 17 carries.

Shula earns win No. 325

Barry Wilner
Associated Press

Give him great quarterbacks and he wins. Give him Doug Pederson and he still wins.

Don Shula became the winningest coach in NFL history Sunday, passing George Halas when he guided the Miami Dolphins over the Philadelphia Eagles 19-14. Shula's 325th victory came on the strength of a big-play defense — Jeff Cross had three of four sacks — and Pete Stoyanovich's second-half field goals of 46 and 45 yards.

It also came with a backup to the backup at quarterback, a guy whose name Shula barely could recall last month.

"This one will be special because of the way we won it," Shula said. They hung so tough to win a game that meant so much to me, especially winning with a third-string quarterback again."

Pederson, a former practice squad player, replaced Scott Mitchell — who had taken over for injured Dan Marino — when Mitchell separated his shoulder early in the second half.

A former backup in the World League, Pederson had two fumbles, one costing the Dolphins an extra point.

Jets 31, Colts 17

At Indianapolis, the Jets put together a three-game winning streak for the first time under coach Bruce Coslet.

Boomer Esiason threw for 256 yards and two touchdowns, Johnnie Johnson capped a 98-yard march to a clinching TD with a 57-yard run and had 141 yards on the ground for New York (5-4).

The Jets, who outruled the Colts 202-92, had the ball for 36:51.

Bears 16, Chargers 13

At San Diego, usually reliable John Carney botched a 40-yard field goal with 1:11 to play that could have forced overtime. Chicago took advantage of San Diego's porous pass defense for the winning TD.

Jim Harbaugh threw a 38-yard pass to rookie Curtis Conway and the Bears (4-5) held on. San Diego (4-5) blew a 10-0 lead.

Cowboys 20, Cardinals 15

The host Cowboys (7-2) won their seventh straight, this time with a new hero — Bernie Kosar. He hit 13 of 21 passes for 199 yards and a 1-yard touchdown to Jay Novacek. Jason Garrett started at quarterback for the injured Troy Aikman, but Kosar came in with 4:49 left in the first period.

Seahawks 20, Browns 5

At Seattle, Kosar's replacement, Todd Philcox, had a miserable day for the Browns (5-4). He threw two interceptions and lost two fumbles in the first half, then was sacked late in the game. Eric Metcalf lost two fumbles, both recovered by Patrick Hunter. Eugene Robinson had both interceptions off Philcox and recovered a fumble as the Seahawks (5-5) had five fumble recoveries and the two interceptions.

Chiefs 31, Raiders 20

The Chiefs (7-2) did not miss Joe Montana because Dave Krieg had a big day. Krieg passed for 178 yards and three touchdowns and the 17th quarterback in NFL history to pass for 30,000 yards.

Falcons 13, Rams 0

The worst defense in the NFL this year overwhelmed the struggling Rams (2-7), the first time Los Angeles has been shut out since 1987. Linebacker Jessie Tuggle was in on nine tackles and had one of six sacks by the Falcons (3-6). Deion Sanders had two interceptions.

Vikings 26, Broncos 3

At Denver, where the Broncos (5-4) hardly ever lose, Sean Salisbury threw for 366 yards and two touchdowns and Fuad Reveiz made four field goals for Minnesota (5-4). Reveiz's 43-yarder won it with 2:49 remaining. Cris Carter caught six passes for 134 yards and a TD.

49ers 45, Buccaneers 21
At Tampa, the 49ers' big stars were unstoppable. Jerry Rice caught four TD passes from Steve Young.

Rice had eight catches for 172 yards and scored on plays covering 12, 51, 9 and 26 yards. The 49ers (6-3) scored on seven of eight possessions with Young at quarterback.

Young finished 23-for-29 for 311 yards and Ricky Watters rushed for 88 yards.

Packers 19, Saints 17
At New Orleans, Chris Jacke's fourth field goal, a 36-yarder with 3 seconds left, won it. Jacke also made kicks from 38, 20 and 44 yards, lifting Green Bay to 5-4.

Brett Favre, under pressure all game and sacked six times, set up Jacke's game-winner with a 54-yard pass to Sterling Sharpe, who gained only 25 yards on his other five receptions. Sharpe suffered from double vision in the game.

Oilers 38, Bengals 3
At Cincinnati, Warren Moon threw for four touchdowns in 2 1/2 quarters, three to Haywood Jeffries.

Backup runner Gary Brown went for a career-high 166 yards and another touchdown in the rain and Houston (5-4) extended its winning streak to four.

Moon hit 23 of 31 for 225 yards. Giants 20, Redskins 6

The host Giants (6-3) burned the Redskins with a halfback option pass by Dave Meggett for a touchdown for the second time this season.

Meggett went in motion and took a handoff at the Redskins' 21. He pulled up and floated a perfect pass to Chris Calloway in the end zone, just out of the reach of Darrell Green.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Associated Press

Hey folks, don't forget about us. That must be how Nebraska, Auburn and West Virginia felt Sunday. Despite perfect records, all three need lots of help to have any shot at winning the national championship.

While talk centers around a possible New Year's Day rematch between No. 1 Notre Dame and No. 2 Florida State — if both win the rest of their regular-season games — the Cornhuskers, Tigers and Mountaineers must be envious. All three could finish with spotless marks and not even get considered for the top spot.

Nebraska earned its third straight trip to the Orange Bowl with a 49-17 victory over Iowa State. The Big Eight champs moved from No. 4 to No. 3 in the poll, leaping once-beaten Miami, which took Rutgers 31-17.

All No. 6 Auburn can do is defeat No. 11 Alabama next week, then go home and hope things fall its way. Auburn, which beat Georgia 42-28 on Saturday, moved to 10-0 for the first time since 1957. They're on probation this year.

Ninth-ranked West Virginia won its ninth straight game, a 49-7 romp over Temple. The Mountaineers play Miami for the Big East lead on Saturday, then finish at Boston College.

"We've been focused and injury free all year," receiver Ed Hill said.

"And the guys are just real hungry right now."

That hunger might not be satisfied if the Mountaineers — like the Cornhuskers and Tigers — don't get some help.

Notre Dame's 31-24 victory over Florida State, which caused the teams to flip-flop positions atop the poll, might have shut everyone else out from title consideration. If the Irish (10-0) take No. 17 Boston College (7-2) at home next Saturday, and the Seminoles (9-1) complete their extremely difficult schedule with wins over North Carolina State and No. 8 Florida, they are almost certain to remain 1-2 and meet again in the Fiesta Bowl on Jan. 1.

Ohio State smelling roses

Mario Fox
Associated Press

While the Buckeyes are smelling roses, the Illini, perhaps knocked out of the football bowl picture all together, may need some smelling salts.

Ohio State beat Indiana 23-17 Saturday to grab a share of the Big Ten title while Illinois lost 28-14 at Penn State.

In other Big Ten games, Michigan routed Minnesota 58-7, Michigan State edged Purdue 27-24 and Iowa beat Northwestern 23-19. Wisconsin was idle.

Illinois, which had a shot at the conference title until the loss, is now 5-5 and on the verge of spending the holidays at home.

"It hurts because we know we were playing for something that means a lot to us," Illinois quarterback Johnny Johnson said.

Ohio State (9-0-1 overall, 6-0-1 Big Ten) can clinch its first trip to the Rose Bowl since the 1984 season with a victory at rival Michigan next Saturday.

But the Buckeyes had their hands full against Indiana (7-3, 3-0) at Columbus, Ohio.

This time, the Buckeyes needed to pick up a first down on a critical fourth-and-inches quarterback sneak by Bret Powers in the final minute.

Raymont Harris ran for a career-high 162 yards to become the 15th Ohio State player to rush for more than 1,000 yards in a season.

Penn State (7-2, 4-2) sacked Johnson nine times at State College, Pa., seven times in the second half. Johnson finished 21 of 41 for 211 yards.

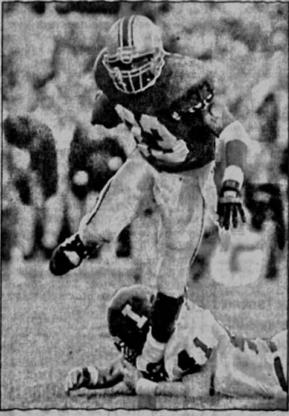

Illinois (5-5, 5-2) lost two fumbles, failing on a fake punt and allowing a 46-yard punt return to their 15.

Penn State's Mike Archie replaced injured Ki-Jana Carter, sixth in the nation in rushing with 124 yards per game. Archie ran for 134 yards and two touchdowns.

Another back, Tyrone Wheatley, sidelined for two games by a shoulder injury, scored three touchdowns as Michigan rolled past Minnesota.

Purdue coach Jim Colletto reluctantly went for a tie, but all he got was another loss.

Colletto had Brad Bobich attempt a 49-yard field goal with the Boilermakers (1-9, 0-7) facing a fourth-and-4 with 28 seconds to

'Medicine' explores new frontiers with innovative but flawed format

Charles Monson
The Daily Iowan

Experiencing "The History of Medicine" gives one the feeling of exploring a new frontier. From its subject matter (mostly turning points in the history of medical science) to its unique format, the production exudes an exciting sense of novelty, of pushing the boundaries of both medicine and theater. Like any fresh innovation, it's got room for improvement, but the possibilities it presents overshadow these concerns.

Press releases and ads from the theatre department have touted "Medicine" as a sort of faux-Disneyland "ride" rather than a standard "play," but it's closer to a multimedia museum in many ways. Rather than whipping through a roller-coaster ride, visitors stroll at a comfortable pace through a series of exhibits. The performers are close to the audience, but they rarely break the fourth wall. "Medicine" more closely resembles Disney World's audio-animatronic Hall of Presidents than it does Space Mountain; the exhibits may be active and flashy, but the audience members remain separate from them.

Whatever you choose to call it — play, ride or exhibit — "Medicine" is an impressive piece of work. It's an incredibly active piece; viewers and performers are kept on the move and are subjected to a complex light, sound and puppet show that must have been a logistical nightmare to coordinate. For the most part, however, director Theodora Skipitares and the large performance staff keep the show moving along smoothly.

Audience members are led in roughly chronological order through an array of scenes that are staged in various places about the Theatre Building. The show's biggest problems spring not from performance flaws but from the weaknesses inherent in this format.

The varying length of the scenes may make audience members restless after a while. Specifically, the juxtaposition of short initial scenes with the extended operating theater sequence may throw theatergoers off; while the scenes are well-done, one finds oneself expecting them to end well before they actually do. Keeping the scenes roughly equal in length would have improved the flow of the production.

Also, the show's peripatetic format puts the ushers in the awkward position of being almost as much a part of the production as the performers. The ushers are expected to keep track of 45 people and to move them as a unit through a winding maze of exhibits and scenes; they aren't always quite up to it. For example, at Friday's 9 p.m. performance, Carol MacVey's wrenching breast cancer monologue — easily the best performance of the evening — was interrupted by an usher leading a lost patron into the theater during the most poignant part of the scene. The episode was nobody's fault, but it yanked the audience back into reality, breaking the spell MacVey had succeeded in casting. Similar incidents occurred throughout the show, damaging its overall integrity and keeping the audience from becoming fully absorbed in the play.

The performance aspect of the show was close to flawless. The puppets which figure into the majority of the scenes are surprisingly well-manipulated, and most of the actors are energetic, earnest and well-cast in their roles. MacVey was the only true standout, but all of the performers were more than competent.

The writing, which was done by both Skipitares and a number of students, is perfectly serviceable. It's pretty light for the most part, touching on heavy subjects like AIDS but concentrating more on straightforward depiction than interpretation. While "Medicine" has several dramatic scenes, it feels like a comedy as much as anything, and the scenes which are simply supposed to be fun are written in sparse prose that keeps the action moving nely. With a few exceptions — namely occasional clumsy rhyming in the Gyna-Soul Cabaret, which tries to work the unwieldy words "testicle" and "spectacle" into a pop song — the play avoids being dragged down by poor phrasing and big words.

"History of Medicine" is an absorbing show in and of itself. More importantly, the nearly limitless possibilities presented by its unique format hint at even bigger, more exciting things to come. It's quite possible that this production is part of a new direction in the evolution of performance art — a scene in "The History of Theater," but one which audiences can enjoy now.

"History of Medicine" performances will continue through this weekend. Show times are 7, 8 and 9 p.m. Nov. 17-21, and 2, 3 and 4 p.m. Nov. 21. Tickets are $12 general admission, $5 for UI students and seniors. Call 335-1160 for information.

'3 Musketeers' strikes it rich in 1st week of release

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Disney's swash-buckler "The Three Musketeers" finished first at the box office in its nationwide weekend debut, taking in an estimated $11.5 million.

Director Brian De Palma's "Carlito's Way," starring Al Pacino and Sean Penn, was in second place in its opening weekend with $9.3 million in receipts, according to estimates by studios and industry sources.

Official box office figures will be released Monday.

The Michael Keaton-Nicole Kidman love story "My Life," another new release, was third with $5.7 million.

Disney's dark, innovative stop-animation film "Tim Burton's Nightmare Before Christmas" fell to fourth place with $5.5 million in receipts, bringing its five-week total to more than $32 million.

Another Disney movie came in fifth place. "Cool Runnings" took in $3.6 million during the weekend to put its total gross to nearly $50 million in seven weeks of release.

DIRECTOR UNIVERSITY OF IOWA CENTER FOR BIOCATALYSIS & BIOPROCESSING

The University of Iowa, Center for Biocatalysis and Bioprocessing (CBB) seeks a qualified scientist to serve as Director of the Center. We seek a leader with a distinguished career in biocatalysis and/or bioprocessing. Ideally, the Director will have extensive industrial contacts and scholarly credentials suitable for a tenured position in any one of the following academic departments: Biochemistry, Chemical and Biochemical Engineering, Chemistry, Civil and Environmental Engineering, Medicinal and Natural Products Chemistry, and Microbiology.

The Director will report directly to the Vice President for Research and will be responsible for coordination of all the Center's activities. These include: planning and development of the Center's new facilities; budget management, staff management and recruitment; working with industry to seek industrial, federal and state support for research projects to be conducted in the Center; expansion and development of an industrial affiliates program; management of university/industry minisymposia, seminars, and annual conferences on Biocatalysis and Bioprocessing. The CBB is a multidisciplinary organization founded in 1983 and is currently supported by an annual state appropriation of $1.27 million. Its 37 faculty affiliates, drawn from six departments and four colleges, are supported by more than $6 million annually from federal, state and industrial sources.

Applicants are expected to have a Ph.D. degree or equivalent. Salary will be commensurate with qualifications and experience. Applications including a curriculum vitae, a current list of publications and grant support, and the names of three references should be sent to:

David J. Skorton, Vice President for Research, The University of Iowa, 201 Gilmore Hall, Iowa City, IA 52242-1320. Applications will be received until the position is filled. The University of Iowa is an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

FILM REVIEW

Floundering, irritating 'Carlito' dangles carrot, stymies De Palma fans

Ian Corwin and Tad Paulson
The Daily Iowan

Does director Brian De Palma still have the touch when collaborating with the diminutive Al Pacino? Can the men who successfully splattered "Scarface" across movie screens everywhere back in 1983 come through again with their performances from even the most incapable actors (e.g., Nancy Allen and John Travolta in 1981's "Blowout"). All of these things follow us into the theater and hang in front of our eyes as we watch "Carlito's Way," and they wind up shattering on the floor after the closing credits roll.

"Carlito's Way" is a soft-core take on De Palma's "Scarface," but this time Pacino is a Puerto Rican with a dream instead of a Cuban, and he's a little nicer to the people he kills. Pacino's Carlito is a reformed smack dealer in the midst of the money-hungry '70s. After his lawyer David Kleinfeld (Sean Penn) rescues him from a 30-year prison term, Carlito decides to straighten up and fly right, his ultimate goal being to get enough money to start a car rental business in the Bahamas.

Shaking off his former crime associates, Carlito invests in "legitimate" business, buying part of a local nightclub in the hopes of raising enough money to subsidize his dream.

He also makes an all-out effort to resume his relationship with his former girlfriend, Gayle (Penelope Ann Miller from "Awakenings"), whom he dumped after going into prison. He tries to convince her that he's traveling the straight and narrow path.

But Pacino's utterance from the third "Godfather" film haunts him again in "Carlito's Way" — "Every time I try to get out, they pull me back in." So it goes; the newly remade Carlito gets pulled back into a life of crime, and he has to learn again (along with the audience) that crime doesn't pay.

Al Pacino stars in the new Brian De Palma film "Carlito's Way."

The trouble is that we already know that. Unlike Tony Montana's twisted naiveté in "Scarface," David Koepf's screenplay (adapted from two novels by Edwin Torres) doesn't give Carlito any depth, and we cease to care what happens to him. The dialogue itself is so thin and clichéd that Carlito's closest relationships seem trivial, lacking the power and devotion De Palma wants us to think is there.

This is most evident in the relationship between Carlito and Gayle — their lines are so contrived and overly sappy that it becomes insulting to the viewer's intelligence. Unlike Michelle Pfeiffer's coke-addled, headstrong waif in "Scarface," Miller has no character to sink her fully capable teeth into. She provides no foil to Pacino's Carlito and is, therefore, totally unbelievable.

Unfortunately, De Palma devotes too much time to developing this distracting, irritating relationship. It severely detracts from the momentum of Pacino's performance; if De Palma had cut it altogether, the movie would have been shorter, tighter and much more entertaining.

What De Palma does give us, to his credit, are some great action sequences and Sean Penn — the two redeeming factors of "Carlito's Way." In homage to his own "Untouchables," De Palma stages a racing, exhilarating chase scene through New York's Grand Central Station and allows Carlito's dark, machismo side to emerge in several confrontational scenes that are packed with frenzied, explosive energy.

And Penn, as always, is incomparable; his performance as Kleinfeld is yet another example of why he is one of the best character actors to emerge from the deluge of '80s cinema. His hair shaved back, permed and dyed red, Penn's Kleinfeld is a quivering, paranoid cracker sans cheese, snorting up coke like a virulent vacuum cleaner.

Penn, brought out of his voluntary retirement from acting by De Palma (whom he worked with on the abhorrent "Casualties of War"), often upstages the reserved Pacino, whose heart just doesn't seem to be into "Carlito's Way." And without Pacino, who never really gets a grip on either Carlito or his Puerto Rican accent, "Carlito's Way" sinks early on and never manages to re-emerge.

newest effort, "Carlito's Way"?

Sadly, the answer is no.

Which is a true pity, since De Palma has recently been floundering in the backwash of two majorly disappointing efforts, "Bonfire of the Vanities" (1990) and "Raising Cain" (1992). It makes one wonder if this is really the same individual who churned out classic after classic earlier in his checkered career. (Who could forget the sultry "Dressed to Kill" [1980] and the slam-bang "Untouchables" [1987]?)

But "Carlito's Way" disappoints in the most maddening way possible — it is victim to the dangling-carrot principle. We know what Brian De Palma is capable of: the prolonged suspense, which often rivals Hitchcock; the stylized violence, so reminiscent of Peckinpah in its eerie beauty; and the ability to elicit remarkably intricate per-

The Union Bar and Grill offers a techno twofor tonight, as My Life With the Thrill Kill Kult, above, plays with opening band Machines of Loving Grace.

Techno-industrial duo screaming through I.C.

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

An alert for black-clad, shaved-head indus-trio-punks everywhere: word travels too slowly in this town, and it's taken many people a long time to hear the news — a little band called My Life With the Thrill Kill Kult is slated to break eardrums tonight at the Union Bar and Grill, 121 E. College St.

The Union is in for its truest structural weakness test since the bar was built. Thrill Kill Kult has been around for years, lashing out at common sense society with a driving brand of techno-industrial dance music, overlaid with distortion and a whole lot of audible screams which are capable of whipping even the most sedate dance-club crowd into an undulating mass. But every dance-club hopper knows that, just as they're bound to know that nothing beats the same tunes done while the band is standing in front of them. And as if a live performance weren't reason enough to set everyone's butts to jiggle, there's the fact that Thrill Kill Kult has only recently begun to get the recognition it deserves.

The band is truly on the rise — "Sex on Wheelz" and "Her Sassy Kiss," two Thrill Kill Kult faves on the dance scene, were used in the soundtrack to the film "Cool World," and the group's latest disc, "13 Above the Night," is doing well in record stores and pulling down some favorable reviews.

Although my loyalty as a Thrill Kill Kult fan remains with the band's earlier work, the show tonight should prove to be a blasting, danceable mix of old and new. Magazines and newspapers across the country have been raving about the group's live energy and its domineering stage presence.

But perhaps the most pleasant surprise about this traveling industrial circus is the band chosen as the opener, a group from Tucson, Ariz., called Machines of Loving Grace. Get this — they're a techno / industrial band with a real drummer and a real bassist ... whom they tour with! How novel. Actually, the band's first major CD release, "Concentration," is some of the most articulate, inspired industrial music I've heard in a long time.

Rather than playing off of the recent Trent Reznor / Al Jorgenson trend of "smeared sound," thus burying any distinct musical atmosphere in a wall of distorted noise (à la Reznor's "Broken EP" or Ministry's "Psalm 69"), Machines of Loving Grace keep the screams and guitar feedback to a minimum. Instead, they trust some solid melodies and heavily atmospheric rhythms to carry off their sound, and to a large extent, they do.

Thrill Kill Kult is reason enough to hit this show — but if you go, get there early and check out Machines of Loving Grace. Both bands are well worth shakin' out the kinks and dancin' up a storm.

Tickets to tonight's show are $8 at the door. The house opens at 9 p.m.; the show will start around 10.

Oscar hindsight raises issues of publicity's favoritism

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

"Every year in Barcelona they give awards for poetry. The third prize is a silver rose. The second prize is a gold one. The first prize, the one for the very best poem of all, is a real rose." — Director Peter Bogdanovich, on what the Academy Awards should be about.

It was an ugly birth, and the child has grown into a monster. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences was originally founded by Louis B. Mayer (then chief of MGM Studios) and a small group of Hollywood elite in 1927. Divided into five subdivisions (actors, writers, directors, technicians and producers), the academy's public goal originally was to act as a union to protect its members' interests.

In truth, it merely succeeded in drying up attempts by Actors' Equity (among other groups) to unionize the work force of one of America's most rapidly flowering industries. As a result, Mayer and his cronies had little to worry about during the Depression — cheap labor, temperamental actors more concerned with their fame than their talent and assembly-line production techniques all replaced the concern for aesthetics, while the exploration of film as a serious art form fell to "people who could better afford it," like German, French and Italian production companies.

What has all this to do with the way we make movies in America today? Quite a bit, if I dare say — it has retarded the United States' growth in the area of serious filmmaking and is perhaps responsible for promoting worthless movies while at the same time strangling our own cream of the crop.

Take Dustin Hoffman, one of America's most respected and versatile character actors. When "The Graduate" was nominated for several Oscars in 1967, director Mike Nichols was one of the only nominees for the film to actually take home a statue. Although up for the award, Hoffman lost out to Rod Steiger as Best Actor for "In the Heat of the Night." In a heart-wrenching speech made after the ceremony, Hoffman denounced the Oscars as "a gross charade which honors the cotton candy of the box office receipts rather than artistic integrity."

New Cocteau cocktail part of fall release rush

Stuart Reid
The Daily Iowan

Ah, fall. The most glorious time of the year. Why my odd fascination with the months of October through December, you ask? Is it the leaves rustling through the grass that excites me so? Perhaps it's the anticipation of holiday cheer?

No, it's just that fall (or "pre-Christmas," to use industry lingo) is when all the records come out. You may see me over the next month or two with my nose pressed up against the glass of the record shops waiting for them to open. But in the grand scheme of things, how insignificant is the occasional frostbitten nose or gangrenous toe compared with the joy and wonder of, for example, a new Cocteau Twins album?

Asking a record critic to review the Cocteau Twins is analogous to asking a Christian to critique God. What are you going to say? "Well, I really enjoy the sunsets and think that the giraffes are awfully clever, but I don't see how Pluto really adds much to the solar system."

No, even those few record hacks with fair-to-middlin' vocabularies are sent scurrying after the old thesaurus, trying to find other words that mean ethereal or rococo, only to be reminded of the rather strict limitations of the English language.

Four Calendar Café, the new album, is a much less radio-friendly release than 1991's "Heaven or Las Vegas." It is, however, like all Cocteau Twins albums, a major landmark in the progressive music landscape — in this case, one that hearkens back to a quieter, more introspective era.

"Evangeline," the British single, is frankly one of the least interesting songs on the record, stylistically more along the lines of "Victorlana" than anything else in the Cocteau's back-catalog. While "Victorlana's" sleepy, indistinct cloudscape makes it one of my favorite and most listened-to Cocteau Twins albums, it works much better as a whole and does not take well to being segmented out into three-minute sound bites. "Evangeline," by virtue of being this sort of track, fits comfortably into the context of the album but somehow loses much of its majesty when transferred into the radio format.

"Bluebeard," which strikes dramatic new ground for the Cocteaus, would have been a far more astute pick for immediate radio airplay. The song's almost country / western guitar twang alongside Robin Guthrie's traditionally washed-out production style combine with Elizabeth Frazier's vocals in an utterly blissful fashion. In addition, the clear, accessible lyrics are also surprisingly different, given her penchant for singing little more than vowels and word salad.

"Are you the right man for me / or are you toxic for me?" asks Frazier. This track alone establishes Four Calendar Café as a turning point in the Cocteau Twins' image. No longer are they the visiting celestials of the past led by the willowy ice-goddess with childlike eyes. Rather, "Bluebeard" establishes the Cocteaus as real people with decidedly human concerns, fears and wishes. Strangely though, this doesn't hamstring their efforts.

Four Calendar Café is not the sort of album that takes well to the quick-and-dirty assimilation process demanded by the standard record review format. However, I suspect that this album will be paying dividends and offering up new perspectives long after much of the rest of the pre-Christmas rush has been filed away to collect dust.
