two counts of attempted murder in Greene County District Court Thursday purpose.

Employment forecasted for grads

Frances Kantamani

The Daily Iowan

University students who have their degrees in the academic year may see a better chance of landing a job than graduates in the past few years, according to a recent survey.

The survey, conducted by the College Placement Council of the University of Iowa, showed that 14 percent of employers plan to hire new college graduates in the coming months. The survey was conducted in February and March, and the results are expected to be released in early April.

"Employers clearly do like to hire people who have an education," said Frances Kantamani, a spokesperson for the Council. "We've seen an improvement in the job market, and we expect this trend to continue."

The survey also found that employers are looking for candidates with specific skills and experience. "Employers are looking for candidates who have experience in their field," said Kantamani. "They're also looking for candidates who have strong communication skills."

Cedar Rapids is one of 71 cities that have been considered and will be backed up to the network. Two speakers will be allowed at each site.

The group plans to have members stand every hour in groups of 100 supporters (HP 100 and HP 102) who will call for the death penalty.

Their efforts will not be enough to đaeth for the seat Republican Party Chairman Mervin R. Olston.

"Two percent of Iowans are for the death penalty, a reason why the impact of the group's efforts will not be strong enough to 'win' the issue," said Rep. Steve Clute, who represents the Des Moines area. "There has been a lot of discussion about the death penalty in recent years, and I believe that the majority of Iowans support the death penalty. However, I believe that the majority of Iowans are concerned about the cost and the human rights implications of the death penalty."

'Throttling' freedom of speech

The UI administration has stepped up its harassment of the Campus Activities Board, igniting the group for handing out pamphlets at a location on the Pentacrest. In a December letter, Dean Jones offered and then revoked permission to hand out pamphlets, a practice he cited in the board's meetings on campus, and said "previews" in its yearbooks.

The administration's heavy-handed efforts to silence CAF should be of concern to all as a violation of free speech and basic fairness. What Jones' letter does fail to mention is that when CAF first applied for permission, as a request was denied by UI administration, explaining that Campus Security officers were afraid of a possible genuine threat of distinguishing violence, reflecting serious signing.

While the Pentacrest is public space, the classroom materials policy is not. The administration can realistically expect anyone to believe that CAF'sscriptions are a fear that a few students are on an open, grossly public space associated with an area from some sort. Particularly chilling is the fact that the board has maintained a table and that these plans are now in line under the Pentacrest.

It is evident that CAF has been targeted because of the violent and damaging criticism of UI policies by other student groups that shares unalike the administration's time to improve the situation of Pentacrest policy. When the Ohio State women's basketball team took to the court Wednesday night, they were fighting for a lot more than just a victory.

Chances are slim that Northwestern (4-5) will ever be ranked higher than 25th in the Big Ten, and its 2.9 overall block-per-game average is first in the conference. A second win over the Wildcats would keep the Hawkeyes atop the Big Ten.

"We're going to really tough for them," Iowa coach C. Vivian Stringer said. "Miss Smith is averaging 22.6 points and 6.3 rebounds for Ohio State."

"We've got to do everything we can on defense against Smith," Albrecht said. "We've got to guard her as well as we can.""

Eagles nab 49er assistant coach

Bill Bergey, a defensive assistant coach for the San Francisco 49ers, is expected to interview with the New England Patriots for defensive coordinator on Tuesday.

Bergey, 61, in his second stint as the 49ers' defensive coordinator, has also served as the San Francisco 49ers' defensive coordinator in 1993.

Bergey has the NFL's second-longest tenure with the same franchise, behind Dick Butkus, who was with the Los Angeles Rams for 14 years.

The candidates Santa considered included former Dallas coach Jerry Jones, Dick Broich, the only 49ers coach to leave the team, and Gary Shaw, the current defensive coordinator for the Cleveland Browns and Paul Rhoades, Connecticut assistant coach.

Rhode was interviewed for the coaching job at Lsu, started in a staff that went 7-6-1 and failed in a season that went 7-6-1 to make the playoffs.

With the salary, he was four Super Bowl titles as an assistant defensive coordinator for the Vikings and Paul Rhoades, Eastern Carolina assistant coach.

Others reportedly on Santa's list included Felix Tizgy, the defensive coordinator for the Vikings and Paul Rhoades, Eastern Carolina assistant coach.

When you only get one chance to do something, you better do it right," Chris Snider said recently after the Hawkeyes' men's track team followed its best meet of the season with a return to the national meet in Iowa City.

The national meet, which is being held in Missoula, Mont., is the final meet for the Hawkeyes this season. The team has been eliminated from any chance of earning a trip to the NCAA championships.

But the Hawkeyes say they are not going to rest on their laurels after their best meet of the season. They say they have been preparing for this meet all season long.

"We've been working on this meet all season," Pat Patton, the Hawkeyes' head coach, said. "We've been working on this meet all season long, and we're not going to let this meet go."

Carlesimo has no regrets

PORTLAND, Ore. — Halfway through his first season as an NBA coach, P.J. Carlesimo couldn’t be more excited. He’s leading an up-and-coming team to the playoffs, and despite a series of injuries, he has the Trail Blazers looking like a team that could make a deep run in the playoffs.

Carlesimo, who was fired as coach of the New York Knicks last season, has been named the NBA Coach of the Year for the 2022-23 season. He is the first coach to win the award in his first season with the Trail Blazers.

The 55-year-old coach, who was a star point guard in the NBA, said he’s been able to instill a culture of resilience in his team and has been able to get the most out of his players in his first year.

“I think it’s been an uphill battle,” Carlesimo said. “But I think we’ve been able to overcome those challenges and continue to grow as a team.”
