Republicans cry foul over president's baseball proposal

President Clinton said he had been optimistic earlier in the evening that he might be able to return to a settlement or at least toward one, that would assure "that baseball was coming back in this country."

"Unfortunately, the parties have not yet been able to come to an agreement," Clinton said. "The American people are not capable of settling this strike with their own. The time for us to step into this plate and use the legislation."

He said when the driver of a city vehicle stops to issue parking citations, the vehicle must have a flashing warning light (other than hazard lights) on and be parked in a manner that does not obstruct traffic or business. Motorized wheelchairs are not usually considered to be vehicles.

Dollman said he would investigate this particular incident and the policies concerning parking city vehicles in commercial zones.

Social scene flourishes in high-school halls

David Deidrick-DeSantos, The Daily Iowan

Wednesday, February 8, 1995

At 11 a.m., the sound of footfalls in the hallways of West High filled with the familiar laughter and chatter of students. The day began with a sense of excitement as the first bell rang.

Each day, nearly 3,000 high-school students and teachers walk, run, and rush through the hallways of West High.

"Do you have your math homework?" a student asked. "I heard the greatest pickup line in the history of ever. I said, 'Who wants to have a breakfast with me?' and the girl said, 'Oh, I'll pick you up or maybe you?"

"Have you heard the pickup line my friend said? He said, 'What do you call a spoonful of water?' And I said, 'That's a full spoonful of water.'"

"I made a change of plans today. I said, 'what if you don't go to class tomorrow?' And she said, 'Then I'll have to go tomorrow."

"I went to the lockers and said, 'Do you want to have a Valentine?' And she said, 'yes."

"I turned the tables and said, 'You are an old student from the opposite side.'"

As the students continued to argue over whether they should fight in school or outside, other groups of students gathered to discuss the topic.

"If you're up on the ghords, why not pick them up?" one student said.

"I'm going to have a cake for you if you can have a boy or a girl. That's the difference."

The crowd of students和社会 continued to argue over the seating of a pending West High matter. The teacher called to the two groups to just talk it over and then stepped in to break up the argument.

Members of the two arguing groups stopped outside the debate and listened as the teacher continued.

"At 8:01 a.m., the first bell rang. Students slowly began to disperse from their circles and gatherings. Locker closed, and students started breaking for class. As the door opened and students began to file into the hall, the third bell rang - students rushed back to class.

The third bell ring, doors shut and teachers could be heard bickering closed doors. Through windows in the door, students could be seen seated at desks and surfing the internet.

During class time the hallways were empty. Only a handful of students and teachers walked along the hallways, looking for a place to study.

Whether rushing off to lunch or sprinting madly to their lockers in theสวมphere hallways, West High students comprise of a wide variety of people, cultures and backgrounds, making for some wild and interesting interaction in the hallways.

Announcements will not be printed on a Calendar for Breeders' guitarist on the first day of the new day. As the clock rang, other group members began to voice their opinions.

"I want to take it outside," said a member of the opposing group.

"The teachers will be back to break up the argument," another student said.

"Some kids just want to break up the argument," said another.

"I'm going to have a cake for you if you can have a boy or a girl. That's the difference."

As the two students continued to argue, they were, 'What's the place? Do you just fight here? one student asked.

I.C. Council pumps money into festivals
Sara Kennedy
The Daily Iowan
Investigations in Iowa City downtown area nets a high priority for the Iowa City Council Tuesday night.

The City Council allotted $1,095,000, with the arts and jazz festivals held downtown during a budget meeting for the 1996 fiscal year. The City Council also consulted on the addition of nine or more additional police officers, none of whom will be assigned to patrol the downtown areas.

Councilman Jim Throgmorton said, "They need to be more than just money from the people who come to go downtown for the events...

"The city as a whole profits from it," he said. "It provides a sense of community, and we should be willing to put some money in to promote it...

The Arts Festival will not receive any money until the 1996 budget, he said, this summer because it is in the 1996 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

Ethical issues in health care, such as dealing with stress of the elderly, will be discussed during workshops Friday Jan 19 @ 7:30 a.m. in the Main Hallway of the Union.

Jean Strong, UI associate professor of nursing and director of Pre-Vocational Nursing Aid, said the conference, which will break into a session in the afternoon, opens to nursing students from across the state to professionals who are interested in their education.

The conference explores the importance of ethical issues in the health care setting. It is open to students and allows them to hear experts "who are not normally approached," she said.

Attorneys retrace night of homicides

Linda Deutsch

Associated Press

Los Angeles—Prosecutors in the O.J. Simpson case Tuesday laid out a timeline for murder, surrounded around the victim's house and a stall "Within minutes," the judge said.

FBI agents, whose homes are across the alley from Vincent "The Don" Simpson's, testified that about 11 or 12 minutes into the 10 clock scene on June 12, he heard "a very distinctive barking" coming from the area of the alley.

"It was at a significant pitch, and as you may recall, it described at the time as a plaintive wail," said Flegenheimer.

Prosecutors contended that Brown Simpson and her friend Brandi Golden were struck to death about 11:15 p.m. outside their house and that Flegenheimer, who shares a house with Brown Simpson's ex-Ahls, who left bloody paw prints around the murder.

With large color photo of the victim's home displayed on a screen in the room, the jury also heard testimony from employees at Nordstrom's, where where Brown Simpson used her food and bank cards.

It's the latest day Tuesday another of the murder case was played.

And the day ended with a letter response between Prosecutor Dennis Clark and defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr.

"He says it's a simple case," the prosecutor said.

Clark contended that the involved Simpson, Judge Laura Linenikkilich, that no one on the scene was identified by a person and that Simpson's black handkerchief was recovered from the room.

"It's all known to the jury as a possible victim. The man in the black handkerchief," said Flegenheimer.

"It was the court's decision to conclude that the suspect who had been in the room," said the judge.

Who knows what next

I don’t remember the first time I met Mike Royko. His death came as a shock to me, as I’m sure it did to many others I know. I didn’t know his work as a political reporter, nor was I aware of his personal life. I only knew him as a person who wrote about the things that mattered to him. His death is a loss for the world of journalism and for the people who loved him.

My own experience with Royko was more personal. I first met him when I was a student at the University of Iowa. He was a long-time friend of my father, who had been a newspaper editor in Iowa City. Mike and I became friends because of our shared love of writing and our shared interest in politics. We talked about the state of the world, the state of Iowa, and the state of the newspaper business. Mike was always ready to share his knowledge and his insights, and I learned a lot from him.

Royko was a brilliant writer who had a gift for making complex ideas accessible to the reader. He had a way of taking difficult topics and making them understandable. He was also a master of the form of writing that he called “journalistic writing.” This form of writing is characterized by its use of vivid details and its focus on the human interest behind the story. Royko was a master of this form, and his writing was always engaging and informative.

I will miss Mike Royko, and I know that many others will miss him as well. He was a true original, and he will be remembered for his words and for the inspiration that he gave to others. I will miss him always.

Houston Rockets Robert Horry and Vernon Maxwell leave the court Monday night excited by security guards after Maxwell went into the stands and allegedly attacked a fan during a game.

PORTLAND, Ore. - Hot-tempered Houston Rockets guard Vernon Maxwell quietly left Portland Monday night after getting into a scuffle with a fan in the Multnomah County downtown hotel.

George's attorney, Richard Maizels, said his client would sign a complaint but didn't know if George signs a check, even Fred Thorn said a player has never damaged in the incident.

"This was a great opportunity. I think he would want to take it down with a preseason knee injury. We're just really happy and his tape clearly shows Maxwell going into the crowd and striking the 10-year-old girl instead.
