Iowa City comes out for rally

"Rally not just for gays and lesbians, but for everyone!"

Linda Morrison
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City residents could be seen coming out for the rally on the steps of the Old Capitol building on Wednesday afternoon. People came together in support of their gay and lesbian friends and family members.

"It's not just for the gays and lesbians, but for everyone," Morrison said. "We need to stand up for each other and support each other."

The rally was held in response to the recent controversy surrounding a national newspaper ad that was interpreted as anti-gay.

"We need to make our voices heard and show our support," Morrison added. "We need to fight for equality and acceptance for everyone."
"Homosexuals are becoming the scapegoat of the radical Christian right. Even though Iowa City is this little liberal enclave, we're going to see legislation to deprive gays and lesbians of their civil rights. We can't be complacent here."

Cronkite recalls junior high reporting days

HOUSTON (AP) — Walter Cronkite has fond memories of his high school days as a Purple Puck reporter.

Cronkite, who anchored the network’s weekday evening news program until his retirement in 1981, was the school newspaper’s first secretary in 1936.

Cronkite, who died Friday at age 92, won a Pulitizer Prize in 1962 for his war reporting.

He was a reporter for the Houston Post in the late 1940s.

The divorce is expected to be finalized by the end of the year.

Bosnian cease-fire imminent

Bosnia's warring parties agreed Wednesday to halt their deadly 11-day war, part of a U.S.-brokered cease-fire in the former Yugoslavia. But the fact that the Serbs were renewing shelling earlier while engineers tried to restore utilities in Sarajevo — a key condi­ tion for the truce — promised a tense start to the negotiations.

"I hope that this is the last day of this war," said Muhamed Muratovic, Bosnia's prime minister. "We must elect someone who doesn't have a memory," said Muhamed Muratovic, Bosnia's prime minister. "We must elect someone who wants to make that change," he added.

"We do not need to replace their policies with our set of professional politicians," said Muhamed Muratovic. "I think it will take a candidate from outside Washington, D.C., to beat Bill Clinton," said former Vice President Al Gore.

Bush said he was running for president to "get the job done" and that America's finest hour is not a memory. "America whose "finest hour is not a memory," he added. "We need a government that can values."

"will be a problem for his re-election campaign here in New Hampshire," said Chezik. "They will have an easier time in New Hampshire than in New York or New Jersey," she added.

"We've never had one of this type," said Chezik. "But it is important that we remember that we are talking about a very serious issue."

FBI probes Amtrak rubble for clues

Michelle Boorstein

HYDE PARK, Colo. — The FBI called in a team Wednesday to lift open Amtrak coaches so agents could look underneath the train to see whether the train was hijacked.

No agents were on the train and no one was on the coach, said FBI spokesman Jim Capobianco. The train was headed to Los Angeles, a Chicago-bound Superliner.

Agents and radical investigators were leaning toward a group called "Quantrill." The group had been noted in the FBI's file, according to the official in Washington speaking on condition of anonymity.

Wednesday at least three copies of a note interpreting the Amtrak derailment as the work of a disgruntled employee were found.

Agents had been checking railroad records for leads to possibly disgruntled employees. "We're going to do the against the odds scenario along the lines that the bureau has not been able to identify the saboteur yet," said a senior Justice Department official.

A senior Justice Department official said in Washington, speaking on condition of anonymity, that he had been told the FBI was leaning toward the theory that the derailment was the work of a disgruntled railroad employee.

"The FBI is not yet open-minded. They are not leaning in any direction yet," said a source close to the investigation who did not want to be identified. The source added that the FBI had interviewed entirely randomly about the derailment and what they might have with rail cars were leaning nowhere yet.

"They're in an end set of cars, they're on their hands and knees, they're in the railroad cars, they're up and off hills, we're all around the area," FBI spokesman Jim Capobianco said.

Leary Pitts was asked on his way out of a Washington briefing if he anticipated the derailment soon. "I am not leaning in any direction yet," Pitts said.

Wednesday.

The Nevada-Los Angeles train toppled 30 feet from a trestle, killing a crew member and injuring at least 73 people.

The train derailed soon after the derailment. Agents assigned to Operation Splitrail also picked up a signal made by a group called "Quantrill," which toppled from a high trestle early Monday, killing a crew member and injuring at least 73 people.

EDITORIAL POINT OF VIEW

Clinton shouldn't send U.S. troops to Bosnia when most Americans don't support the mission.

In the Bosnian conflict, American jets have also done a great job of tending to the neediest in the world. But the American military has been underutilized. The United States troops as part of a NATO contingent that will enforce a peace plan in Bosnia, if there even is a peace plan in Bosnia.

"We can only aim ourselves to the contents," Clinton said, sounding more like Johanna Conley, 85, a world leader who had been unable to attend a meeting on Saturday to speak.

Just who, besides Clinton, wants American troops in Bosnia? None of America's allies. Members of Congress don't. And a certain, retired general, turned elected leader and endorsed presidential candidate, is even more clear.

The White House said Clinton would talk to 33,000 American troops in a Bosnia mission that is separate and independently directed by the United Nations. Clinton has hosted two major peace ceremonies here at home by the huge amount of support expressed on the Viewpoints page.

The result is that killing 10, or 20 American soldiers becomes not just a victory over those men and women, but also a victory over the world's only superpower. The result of those perceptions is that the Americans can maintain a military presence in an environment in which, if such as Bosnia can only maintain a peace process, it is the United States that will make the process.

It is not to say that American forces should lead the way in world conflicts such as Bosnia. But thatleaders should act as a world leader. The Clinton administration should not have to look as far as Bosnia or Lebanon for proof of this.

The regime results in nothing closer to peace.

But as a small compensation for our 1980 invasion, which killed hundreds of thousands of people, there is a property damage, should we ever be faced with a similar situation.

Another factor to consider involves Panama's potential as a region of interest. The United States would likely like to see a consolidated U.S. presence in the region to help allay their fears and make Panama a potential tenement.

One possible alternative is to continue the United Nations in charge of the maintenance of canal security. The Panama Canal would be greatly improved, too, through the economic participation of the international system.

Instead of encouraging the possibility of finding hardships in yet another country, would not a proposal that would be of help our neighbor become self-sufficient be more attractive than through military interventions.

Runaway kids legislation reflects ‘family values’

Iowa legislators are ready to crack down on what they perceive to be a growing problem—runaway juvenile issues. Sen. Mary Lasywski, a Republican, has drawn up a bill that would make runaway kids who leave the state liable for their legal expenses. The bill was introduced because of the growing realization that Iowa needs to take a harder line on runaway kids, according to Undersecretary for Youth Affairs Tom Martin.

The bill was prepared due to the growing number of parents who are concerned that their kids are leaving home without any plan to return. The proposed legislation would make it illegal for a minor to leave the state for any reason other than a legal one.

The bill would require parents to file a notice with the local school district before allowing their child to leave the state. If the child does not return within 30 days, the parents would be required to pay all expenses incurred by the local authorities in attempting to locate and return the child.

The Iowa Department of Social Services is aware of the problem and has been working with local agencies to prevent children from leaving the state without a plan to return. The department is also working with schools to ensure that parents are aware of the potential consequences of allowing their child to leave the state.

Parents have the option to file a petition with the court to have their child declared a runaway. If the court determines that the child is a runaway, the court will order the parents to pay all expenses incurred by the local authorities in attempting to locate and return the child.

The proposed legislation is an attempt to ensure that parents will take responsibility for their children’s actions. It is hoped that the legislation will deter parents from allowing their children to leave the state without a plan to return, thereby reducing the number of runaway kids in Iowa.

The legislation was introduced in response to a growing concern among parents and local authorities. It is hoped that the proposed legislation will help reduce the number of runaway kids in the state.

Letter to the Editor:

To the Editor:

I am concerned about the issue of runaway kids in Iowa. It is important for parents to take responsibility for their children’s actions. The proposed legislation is a step in the right direction.

Sincerely,

Iowa City, Iowa - Thursday, October 12, 1995

儿子 was over and the long road said. "That's fine with me." Rodman said. "I'm in my own 'world out there ."

"I can imagine how tough it would be to The Mariners' side."

"It will." said. "But probably not to the Bench. The Rodman trade be the only Chicago player getting the game-winning single."

"It's been the past three years."

"Jackson, a backup forward on the Knicks' 1973 title team ."

"Burba p."

"At least Kukoc can play small forward most of last season." But if he said, "but probably not to The Bench."

"It will boost Iowa's game Operations, that's what matters."

The first time he got on the case of the Star Trek books he said that Captain Kirk was born in a small town in Iowa, and Steve asked if the city would make Riverside the birthplace of Kirk. The writer said OK, and some of the fans wanted the Enterprise replica.

"Scarslet" misses depth of film

Dorothy Baker

As a reporter, I always feel the need to mention the "little red rain" in the film "Scarslet," a film that is clearly meant to be a love story. The "Scarslet" of the title, a beautiful young woman known for her passionate love, is the main character in the film. However, the film falls short in capturing the depth and complexity of her character.

"Scarslet" is directed by Aaron Han Joon Park, a talented filmmaker known for his unique vision and storytelling skills. The film is set in the fictional city of "New Scarlet," a place that is both beautiful and dangerous. The story follows "Scarslet," a woman who is struggling to find her place in a world that is divided between the "good" and the "bad."

Unfortunately, the film fails to fully explore the depth of Scarslet's character. While the film does a good job of establishing the setting and the characters, it lacks the depth and complexity that would make Scarslet a truly memorable character. The film's focus on the romantic elements of the story, while charming, fails to fully engage the audience. Overall, "Scarslet" is a film that is visually striking and well-crafted, but lacks the depth and emotional resonance that would make it truly unforgettable.

Local record label promotes roots music

Peter Eisenwein

Special to The Daily Iowan

All music is bad at least at the beginning, but with some luck, bad music can become amazing with talent, reach a critical mass and gain regional or nationwide attention.

Though it is hard to tell, Iowa City's new recording that seems to be reaching that critical mass is happening here, but talent must be given to Trailler Records.

Trailler is the brainchild of Dean Zollo, best known as the leader of High and Lonesome. Only began last spring. Trailler already has several critically acclaimed albums out and a few bands on message, but, one can only wonder, what exciting things are in store.

Trailler is driven in part by Dan Scharosch, the gallery's manager. "The gallery recognizes some art is a perfect complement to the national-recognized folk and acoustic acts already in the area," Scharosch said.

"Zollo's label draws from a very diverse pool of talent. We add that extra little touch," Scharosch said.

"The gallery offers the Iowa music a long way to satisfy many tastes. We offer that's different is what we offer," Scharosch said.

"The Mornin' is a Long Way from Home," the first Trailler release, is scheduled to be released this fall.

"For now, though, Zollo is going to keep on the verge of a national release with Trailler Records. The Mornin' is a Long Way from Home," the first Trailler release, is scheduled to be released this fall.

"Cabaret" puts audience in the thick of it

Rob Merritt and the Los Straightjackets perform their "Why not music?" in Mexican professional wrestling costume, masks and all. What has to do with their energetic instrumental music, Los Straightjackets' performing style is not as much music as it is a movie with music. But music is not really needed, the music is a prop to facilitate the fun with it.

It's an odd trend that has started recently: roof top rock bands making themselves unique by the outfits they wear instead of the music they make. For example, the band Man or Astroman? wears space suits, but it's still roof music.

Rock to a highly restrained genre, and Los Straightjackets doesn't fit in well within them. For they provide a fun live show, and their music is captured well in their most recent self-titled album.

Their Los Loco and Nine Stories

To be honest, I really liked "Stay," the first single Lisa Loeb released for the "Reality Bites" soundtrack. It was a sticky sweet song for a sticky sweet movie, admittedly, but it seemed sincere and lyrically fine. I was astonished to see how low she fell without the type of光环 she had around her name.

Thankfully, I was disappointed by Lisa Loeb and Nine Stories full-length album, Tails, which was just released and includes the single "Stay" and other songs.

The album is a lot of the same thing "Stay" has, but the sweetest doesn't only stick for the whole album. The little songs found most of the time don't have a "Stay" like sound, and the accompanying music makes it uneasy and uncommercial.

While her voice is pleasant and cute, she fails to make an identity for herself that separates her from other solo female performers who are fun a lot more fun, because they can seem dated if we think not everyone was a Beetles observer.

"I'm going to keep up "Stay" and pretend it's the only thing she's ever done."

Hi and Lonesome
