Search under way to replace Aikin

National stores have been placed by a UI Liberal Arts Search Committee to appoint a new dean for the upcoming school year.

Current College of Liberal Arts (CLA) Dean Judith Aikin announced her resignation early this school year, citing a low parking spot and a lack of support from students and faculty as her reason for returning to the classroom. Her last day as dean of the CLA will be June 30, 1997. The search for a new dean is expected to begin Feb. 1.

"The resignation was planned really from the beginning. I'll always set five, maybe six years as a goal, and I'd really wanted to stay in some of the goals of the college to help get us on a different path," Aikin said.

Aikin began her term as liberal arts dean on Sept. 8, 1991, to replace Ulvik in the dean's office. She was elected to continue in the post in 1995.

"I did not want to be an administrator," Aikin said.

Judith Aikin, dean of the College of Liberal Arts for more than five years, was named to replace Aikin.

The UI has formed the Liberal Arts Dean Search Committee consisting of nine faculty members, one student, one student administrator and two administrators - who don't have voting rights in the actual selection process.

Departure of 'Hollywood's biggest power broker' announced

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sister Helen Prejean, the Roman Catholic nun whose book 'Dead Man Walking' sold a million copies and was turned into a Lea Thompson film, has announced she will step down from her post as president of the Anti-Death Penalty National Committee.

"I plan to see the movie 'The Good Shepherd' when it opens today and hope it happens as described in the book," Prejean said in a statement.

Prejean said she will still offer spiritual support to those on death row and will continue to speak out against the death penalty. She also plans to work on a new book about her experiences.

Prejean, 70, was a Catholic nun who founded the anti-death penalty group in 1973. She wrote the book 'Dead Man Walking' in 1994, which was made into a movie in 2002.

Prejean said she has been thinking about stepping down for several months.

She has been accused of being too close to death row inmates and has faced criticism from some within the Catholic Church.

Prejean's departure comes as the national debate over the death penalty intensifies. Opponents of the death penalty successfully blocked the death penalty in Connecticut last year and are trying to do the same in other states.

Prejean, who has been a leader in the anti-death penalty movement for decades, said she is looking forward to continuing her work in a different capacity.

VERMILION CLIFFS, Ariz. — For the first time in more than 50 years, the largest and rarest bird in North America took flight over Arizonayso-called condors and carved out their own territories in the western United States.

The federal government agency that oversees the birds, the Fish and Wildlife Service in the United States, has been working for more than a decade to rebuild the populations of the birds, which had been thought to be extinct until 1987.

The birds, which are descendants of the condors that once roamed the American West, are now making a comeback in the wild.

The birds are part of a program to reintroduce the species to areas where they once lived, including the desert of Arizona and the Rocky Mountains.

The program, which started in the 1980s, has been successful in bringing back some of the birds to the wild, but their numbers remain small.

The birds are not yet ready to fly on their own, but they are learning to find food and to take care of themselves.

The birds are an important part of the ecosystem, and their comeback is a sign of hope for the future of the species.

The birds are also an important symbol of the natural world, and their presence in the wild is a reminder of the beauty of nature.

The birds are a reminder of the importance of conservation, and the work being done to bring them back is an example of how we can work together to make a difference in the world.

The birds are an inspiration to us all, and their story is a reminder that we can all make a difference in the world.

Official: Clinton wants Reno to stay

By Peter Baker

WASHINGTON — President Clinton is to request that Attorney General Janet Reno stay on the job until after this fall's elections, escalating a dispute with Vice President Al Gore over who will lead the Justice Department.

Reno has said she would take the post of special envoy to Africa and then resign, but Gore wants her to stay on for the duration of his term and is pressuring Clinton to make that happen.

The dispute has been simmering for weeks, and the White House is working to resolve it.

WASHINGTON — President Clinton is reportedly planning to institute a mandatory drug-testing program for high-risk federal workers as part of an anti-drug plan he is expected to announce Thursday.

The program would require some 500,000 workers in high-risk positions, including airline pilots, railroad engineers, port workers and airline security personnel, to be tested for drugs.

Specifically, the proposal would require the heads of federal agencies to conduct drug tests on workers who handle nuclear material, hazardous materials or who are involved in transportation, banking or postal services.

The program would cover about 500,000 workers.

The White House is also expected to announce plans to strengthen border security, increase drug interdiction efforts and require all federal prison inmates to be tested for drugs.

The president's plan is expected to be part of a broader anti-drug strategy that includes more money for treatment and other programs. It is also aimed at reducing the number of drug arrests and deaths.

The program would be voluntary for federal prisons but mandatory for state and local correctional facilities.

The White House is not expected to announce the specifics of the plan, which is still under development.

Superstitious Russians spit, knock, and even eat bus tickets

In a country rich in 6,000-year-old traditions, especially in smaller towns and rural areas, superstition still has a powerful hold on Russians, even in the face of rapid Westernization and the spread of scientific ideas.

The truly superstitious have been known to throw small stones into the air when the sum of the last three numerals of a license plate or a bus number is a multiple of seven. Such actions are thought to help ensure a smooth ride.

But even those not so superstitious may still believe in the power of crossing one's fingers before entering a building or saying "bless me" after someone sneezes. These actions are meant to ward off bad luck.

I "think Russians are more superstitious than others in believing in superstitions, especially in small towns," said Natalya Petrova, a Muscovite editor. "Now things are changing as fast as people want them to."

Several streets, Tanya says, are circling around some refugees in Tanzania, keeping an eye on them. She says that the refugees have been freed from the control of the RPF in Rwanda. But the refugees have not yet returned to their homes. They won't shake hands or touch refugees, even when attacks by Zairian rebels have forced them to leave their homes.

So far this month, over 5,300 Rwandan refugees have arrived in Tanzania, the UNHCR official says. The area, where seven camps have been set up, is now home to over 351,000 refugees, she said. The area, 38 miles north of Ngora, joining Tanzania with Zaire, is near the Ubangi River.

Nearly 1.2 million Zaireans have fled to Tanzania since 1990. At least 1.2 million refugees remain in Tanzania, according to the UNHCR.

However, the refugees have not yet returned to their homes. They won't shake hands or touch refugees, even when attacks by Zairian rebels have forced them to leave their homes.

In eastern Zaire, aid workers have seen a lot of bad luck. "My mother was killed there," says a Zairean refugee. "I want to go home," she says. "But the situation is wrong."

Florida strong safety Lauren Wright, a two-time All-Big East Conference selection who made a career-high 10 tackles in the Gators' setback at Tal, was named winner of the Jim Thorpe Award as the nation's defensive back.

Northwestern's Pat Fitzgerald, who last year won the Chuck Noll Award and Nagurski Trophy again took the Butkus as the nation's interior defensive back.

Ohio State junior Orlando Pace, who for the second year in a row did not allow a sack, repeated as the Outland winner, symbolic of the nation's outstanding interior lineman.

Wyoming's Marcus Harris, lone receiver in NCAA history record three 1,000-yard seasons, won the Biletnikoff Award as best wide receiver.

"I think the swimmers get pretty nervous to see their parents and get the opportunity to compete in front of them," Selch said.

With that being said, McCord and the added athletes will have a lot to work on the team's mental preparation for the meet.

"We go to Long Beach to race for our nation," McCord said.

Michigan's student-athletes are 100% focused on the meet and ready to go. They can't wait to get on the pool and show their skills.

"The meet is a big deal for us," Muro said.

The event had an amazing turnout with 100% attendance from all the teams. Despite the long hours and the hard work, everyone had a great time. They are looking forward to their next meet in the future.

Hawks meet Gators in Big Ten/SEC Challenge

Wayne Duval

Last season Iowa women's basketball team didn't even get a chance to play in the Big Ten game against Florida.

Despite the team's early struggles, the Hawks have used great defense to improve to 3-2.

The team's early struggles were due to various reasons, but with their 3-2 record, they are looking forward to the upcoming game against the Gators.

The Gators may be relying on two people too much early in the season, according to Duval.

Danny Wuerffel

How could you go wrong with Terry Starks once said, "It's hard not to pick Wuerffel, but the amount of punishment he has had to go through this year is simply incredible." And every time he takes a hit, it appears as if the wind has been knocked out of him. "They must be doing something right," Brink said. "I don't know what it is, but I do know it's working for them." Wuerffel is the only appropriate choice.

Troy Davis

He weathered a two-year crisis with Terry Schwartz when he was suspended for the first two games of the season. But the San Diego State defense that had given up just 16 points in its last 11 games and limited Florida to just 17 points in the first half of the game the previous week still held Davis to just 200 yards passing and six interceptions. "I don't know why people keep saying he's rattled," Schwartz said. "He's not rattled, he's just human."

Jake Plummer

Davis has earned it. Wuerffel's being overlooked because he didn't have enough time to fully develop. It's a shame because he's one of the best quarterbacks in the history of Florida football. Not surprisingly, a phenomenal senior season began to lose its luster when senior radar Jeff Mitchell suffered a stress-reaction fracture in his left ankle Nov. 2 and would give Wuerffel a chance to shine. Wuerffel never offered that as an excuse for his subpar game at the start of this season, he responded by completing 24-21 loss behind an offensive line whose serene disposition belies their ability to dominate in big games, he does what Danny Wuerffel has done, but the amount of punishment he has had to go through this year is simply incredible. The use of children in a movie can cause problems for people, as children can display content in ways that adults might not expect. But when used incorrectly, children are often used as objects in the film. This is the case in "One Fine Day." The film shows a tremendous amount of sexual content, and Children Now said that about 25 percent of children surveyed are so either or unplanned pregnancy or birth.

Jennifer Bowles of Children Now, said attitudes toward sex and its portrayal in the media have increased. "We need to be aware of the rise to rumors that his health is declining."

The use of children in a movie is a saving grace to the film. "I'm not really mad at you," a character says.

Study: Family-hour TV shows fail to mention dangers of sex

Associated Press

It has been found that many family-hour TV shows contain sexual content. The study shows that 25 percent of family-hour TV shows contain sexual content. That's up from 10 percent in 1993 and 4 percent in 1976. The study found that there is a tremendous amount of sexual content on TV during the family hour. This is an example of the risks and responsibilities of sexual behavior.

The study included analyses of children's shows that are not part of the Children's Television Workshop and eight focus groups with children. The study found that children are not being taught about the dangers of sexual content.

Van Damme checks into substance-abuse program

Los Angeles (AP) — Van Damme has entered a substance-abuse program in Los Angeles. The film star was admitted to the Diamond Preparatory Program for substance-abuse treatment. The program is similar to one of Van Damme's previous treatments.

All papers must have a daily edition. No other details were released.

Van Damme's wife, Emma, filed for divorce in June, but the couple has since reconciled, Van Damme said.
