U.S. House votes to restrict teen-age abortions

Opponents say bill will force teens to keep unwanted pregnancies by taking them to states that impose no requirements on underage girls to seek parental rights, protect the health of their fetuses or go to court before having abortions. The House voted 276-150 for a bill endorsed by Rep. Jerry Travaglini, D-Davenport, who must still have the budget approved by the Senate.

Little warning of missile attack, report says

WASHINGTON — A ballistic missile attack against targets in the United States could be averted if officials had paid more attention to an unusual report in August of 1995, according to a new study released by the American Chamber of Commerce.

The study, released by the nonprofit American Chamber of Commerce (AmCham), provides a detailed analysis of the potential threat posed by long-range missiles to the United States and offers recommendations for how the country can better prepare for such an attack.

The report, titled "A Warning from the Past: Preventing a Future Missile Attack," is the result of a comprehensive review of intelligence and security documents from the 1990s.

"The findings of our study are alarming," said John G. Thompson, chairman of the AmCham. "We found that the U.S. government was warned about the possibility of a long-range missile attack in 1995, yet it failed to take the necessary steps to protect the country.

"Our recommendation is that the government should immediately begin preparing for a potential missile attack, including the establishment of a new national security strategy," Thompson said.

The report notes that in 1995, officials at the CIA and other intelligence agencies were warned about the possibility of a long-range missile attack by North Korea.

"In 1995, the CIA received a report indicating that North Korea was developing a long-range missile capable of reaching the United States," Thompson said. "The report was classified and not shared with other intelligence agencies at the time, which could have led to a more coordinated response to the threat.

"If the U.S. government had taken the warning seriously in 1995, it could have prevented a potential missile attack in the future," Thompson said.

In addition to calling for a new national security strategy, the report also recommends that the government should increase its investment in missile defense systems and strengthen its alliances with other countries to deter potential attackers.

The report concludes that the United States should take immediate action to prevent a potential missile attack, and that the government should not wait until it is too late to act.

"The United States cannot afford to wait for a potential missile attack to occur," Thompson said. "We must act now to protect the country from the threat of long-range missiles."
New ploy in GM strike

The United Auto Workers (UAW) and General Motors are set to file a new ploy to resolve their contract dispute, which has resulted in a costly strike against GM. The union has accused GM of a "strikeable" action, which could lead to a strike if the company does not agree to the union's demands.

The UAW has been in talks with GM for several weeks, but the双方 remain at odds over key issues such as wages, benefits, and work rules. The current contract between the two sides expires on December 1, and the UAW has threatened to strike if a new agreement cannot be reached.

The UAW has proposed a "strikeable" action to GM, which could force the company to bargain in good faith or face a strike. The union is seeking a number of changes to the current contract, including increased pay and benefits, as well as improvements to work rules and safety regulations.

GM, on the other hand, has said that it is willing to negotiate, but is concerned about the costs associated with a strike. The company has already spent over $1 billion in lost productivity due to the current strike, and is looking for a resolution that will not further harm its bottom line.

The ongoing strike is the longest in GM's history, and has been described as a "speculative" action by both sides. The UAW is seeking to renegotiate the current contract, which was signed in 2011, and has raised concerns about the adequacy of the previous agreement.

The strike has also been a source of concern for the U.S. economy, with the auto industry accounting for 5% of the country's GDP. The strike has led to the shutdown of production at GM plants across the country, including in Flint, Michigan.

The UAW and GM are expected to continue their negotiations in the coming weeks, with a resolution seen as a key test of the union's ability to negotiate effectively. The strike will continue until a new agreement is reached, or until GM decides not to bargain in good faith.

Classrooms to receive technology upgrade

REGENTS

(AP Photo/John Hamilton) George Bolz, chairman of the [AP Photo/John Hamilton] Board of Regents, announces at the Board of Regents meeting at the University of Iowa in Iowa City on Thursday that the university's Advanced Writing Center will receive $100,000 for technology upgrades.

Bolz, who is also a professor of English and director of the Writing Program, said the money will help the center improve its computer and software capabilities.

The center, which was established in 1975, offers a range of services to students, including one-on-one tutoring, workshops, and online resources.

The upgrade will allow the center to provide more effective and efficient services to students, Bolz said.

"This funding is critical to our ability to continue providing high-quality writing support to our students," he said.

The regents approved a plan to allocate $100,000 for technology upgrades at the center.

Residents unsure about new skyscraper

SKYSCRAPER

Residents say they are unsure about the new skyscraper that is proposed to be built on the site of the old theater building.

"I don't know what to think," said one resident.

"I'm worried about the noise," said another.

The proposed skyscraper would be the tallest building in the city and would replace the old theater building, which was built in the 1920s.

The city planning commission is currently reviewing the plans for the new building.

Clinton expected to veto bill

Sen. Clinton is expected to veto a bill that would allow the government to seize private property for the construction of a new airport.

"This bill is a giveaway to developers," said Sen. Clinton.

"I will not support any measure that puts the interests of big business above the needs of individual citizens," she said.

The bill is scheduled to be voted on next week in the Senate.

The president has said he supports the bill, but he has not yet made a final decision on whether to sign it.

Sudanese rebels in Ethiopia

Sudanese rebels in Ethiopia have said they will not participate in peace talks with the government.

"We have not been invited to the talks," said a rebel leader.

"We will only negotiate with the government when they have shown a genuine commitment to peace," he said.

The rebels have been fighting against the government for several years, and the conflict has caused many deaths and displacements.

The government and the rebels have been negotiating for peace talks for months, but there has been little progress.

More questions than answers from UIHC

I get nervous when I walk past the Central Sterilizing Service in the lower level of the UI Hospitals and Clinics, because something very strange is going on there. It involves a surgical tool called bipolar forceps, conflicting reports, the UIHC withholding pertinent information from patients, the reutilization of disposable products and more questions.

While investigating this seemingly mundane operation, I’ve had the opportunity to talk with several UIHC workers who told me they had participated in events that made their blood run cold. One of the workers told me about his experience as a result of an injury to the face during surgery, such as having a vent in a patient’s head. The UIHC uses numerous manufactured by Q2 Medical, a division of DePuy, a company that has been associated with a number of negative reports related to its customer service representatives for Q2 Medical. We're concerned by the fact that the UIHC still doesn’t provide patients with the information they should be able to receive about your business or the business in the news.

"It's obvious that the UIHC is not being transparent about the business in the news," said the worker. "We're concerned that the UIHC is not being transparent about the business in the news." He added, "We're concerned that the UIHC is not being transparent about the business in the news."

The UIHC has not yet responded to our request for comment.

Gang 'problem' may be racist

To the Editor:

I'm not sure if I'm correct, but I've heard that "the problem" may be racist. We have had a number of recent reports of gang activity in the area, but I'm not sure if that's the case.

What I heard was that there were gang activity reports, and I've heard that the UIHC has had trouble with a product called "the UIHC's solution." I don't know if that's the case, but I've heard that there have been reports of gang activity, and I think that's a concern.

Bursting the bubble on UI field plan

The storm that blew through Iowa City over two weeks ago was a real-life example of how the University of Iowa's (UI) new field plan can cause problems for the university and its students.

The UI is in the process of building a new indoor football field as part of its ongoing efforts to improve the facilities for the university's football team. The field is expected to be completed in the fall of 2018, and will be used by the university's football team for the 2018 season.

However, the UI's decision to build the new indoor football field has caused a lot of controversy and debate. Some people have expressed concerns about the cost of the project, while others have raised questions about the benefits of having an indoor football field.

In response to these concerns, the UI has said that the new indoor football field will provide a number of benefits for the university and its students, including improved facilities for the football team, increased revenue for the university, and improved student experiences.

However, many people have questioned the UI's decision to build the new indoor football field, and have expressed concerns about the potential negative impact of the project on the university's finances, the environment, and the community.

In light of these concerns, it's important for the UI to carefully consider its decision to build the new indoor football field, and to ensure that the project is carried out in a way that is consistent with the university's values and priorities.

Moore's hard work pays off with pro contract

The Pride of Shueyville?

Justin Wessel has his NCAA championship ring; now the Iowa native wants to prove he's earned it

By James Krause

Prime Time Tonight

Warner and Co. get set to launch Moore's first PGA Tour money event of the season this week at the Royal Birkdale Open in England - The only one of the last four majors that Moore has never won.

One of those days, David Duval noted, the sign welcoming travelers to Shueyville, Iowa, is going to read a familiar sight.

But before the former Hawkeye and current PGA Tour star begins his quest for a major championship, he'll have the honor of hoisting the trophy that once was his own.

It's been seven years since the 1995 NCAA Tournament, where Moore and Iowa State defeated Oklahoma State, 149-155, to win the national championship.

Wessel, who was a senior at the University of Arizona at the time, said Moore was a key member of the team's success.

"He's been the best player I've ever seen," Wessel said. "I think he's got a shot at winning the Masters this year."

New stadium withstands big flush

Bring on the halftime rush

By David Bender

BALTIMORE — An arrow of one of the stadium's four large digital displays in the northeast corner of the stadium malfunctioned, sending the message "Bring on the halftime rush!" an hour early.

"We had a malfunction in the digital display," said Chuck picturesque, one of the stadium's four large digital displays.

"Our computers are a little spastic," he said. "They're working overtime.

"We sent the message to the public very early so we could make sure everyone got the message," he said.

The Ravens are one of the few teams in the league to have a halftime display.

"We're excited about it," said Richardson, the team's public relations director. "It's a fun way to entertain the fans during halftime.

"We'll be sending out the message every halftime," he said.

"We hope it's a hit," said Richardson.

NEW YORK — Albert Bell returned to the Yankees on Friday night after a three-day absence.

"Albert wanted to spend some time with his family," said a team spokesman.

"We support Albert's decision to take some time off," the team said.

Albert had been with the Yankees for 15 years before being traded to the Rangers in a deal that sent outfielder Alfonso Soriano to Texas.

"Albert has been a key player for us," the team said.

"We're glad to have him back," the team said.

Albert, who signed a one-year deal with the Yankees in January, was hitting .291 with 11 home runs and 29 RBI in 38 games this season.

UNI may be home on the road

The search for the new home of the UNI wrestling program begins with Cedar Falls. This is the most likely spot.

Cedar Falls, Iowa—On the road for the first time since the NCAA championships, the Panthers are ready for a new challenge.

The team heads to the University of Northern Iowa campus in Cedar Falls, Iowa, for a dual against the University of Iowa on Friday, September 10. The dual is scheduled to begin at 6:00 p.m. Local time.

The Panthers finished 2nd at the NCAA championships, marking the team's best finish in program history. The team was led by junior Nate Pugh, who won the 149-pound weight class.

Despite the success at the national level, the team is looking to improve in other areas. Head coach Timm Wieland said the team is focused on developing a strong foundation for the future.

The Panthers have won seven national junior college championships in the past 10 years and have been led by national stars such as Randy Pugh, who finished 2nd at the NCAA championships.

But Pugh is just one of eight returning wrestlers who led the team to the national title. The Panthers also return four All-Americans from last season, including Pugh and senior Michael Smith.

The team is looking to build on its success from last season and continue its rise to national prominence.

In addition to the dual against Iowa, the team will also face off against the University of Wisconsin-Madison on Saturday, September 11, in Madison, Wisconsin.

The Panthers have high expectations for the upcoming season and are looking forward to the challenges that lie ahead.

The team is confident in its ability to compete at the highest level and is ready to take on the best the NCAA has to offer.
