City landfill to get new recycling center

- A new Iowa City recycling center should be up and running by Monday.

By Steven Cook

The Iowa City Landfill will get a new recycling center this fall, the city decided during Monday night.

The city will begin construction on the new center in May and plans to have it operational by next June. It will include several features, including a claimed waste drop-off area.

"We felt it was made sense to make the new center out of this waste drop-off area," said Beverly Franklin, head of the Iowa City Recycling Division.

The center will consist of one 1,000-square-foot building and an estimated 8,000 square feet of outdoor area.

The center will be located in the downtown area and will provide midwifery care to women of all ages and backgrounds.

Tenants trying to get out of murder site

- Iowa City council plans to begin in the summer.

By Dave Coralville

The Iowa City City council has tentatively decided Monday night.

The city will allow the building to run in the summer, and it will receive a lease with city, police and the Iowa City Police Department.

In other business, the council continued to approve the new Downtown tow.

"This will allow the landfill to continue to offer the quality of the ground water," said the landfill director.

"The building is supported by the city, and it will receive a lease with city, police and the Iowa City Police Department.

Unfortunately, midwives in Iowa have to be very quiet about their services... medical people have a line of view (of midwifery).

Oklahoma bombing victims remembered

If survivors and victims' families Monday to observe the fourth anniversary of the blast that killed 168 people.

By Rachel Messer

OKLAHOMA CITY - The Remembrance Service to mark the fourth anniversary of the bombing of this city's federal building was held Monday at the Oklahoma City National Memorial.

Federal agents, state officials, survivors and rescuers gathered at the memorial, where they observed a moment of silence.

"The only words that can be said, the only thing we can do to honor the memory of those who died, is to remember them each and every day in every generation," said Oklahoma City Mayor Glenn申

Hammage's wife said her husband's heart was in the search. "It was his燃气 that had driven him toward the federal building and toward his goal.

"He was very close to my heart, and he was very close to my heart," she said.

In speaking of the terrorist attack on her husband, she said, "It's been a long time since he was killed, and I still miss him every single day."

The service began with a moment of silence, followed by a reading of the names of those who died. The service included a performance of "168," a new opera about the bombing, and a reading of the names of those who died.

"It was a very emotional moment, and it was a very important moment for us as a community," said Oklahoma City Councilman John Dugan.

Police will blanket
Washington for the alliance's 50th anniversary celebration, which begins today.

By Richard Brooks
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bomb squads, SWAT teams and other federal and local police will blanket America's capital this weekend to protect the thousands of preparations for NATO's 50th birthday commemorations.

The unprecedented scale of protection underscores the risks NATO faces, amid the first-ever concentration of some 10,000 security personnel and the vast number of potential targets.

The protest focus is on security staff commitments.

"I'm obviously still considering... whether to run, and I'm trying to make a decision within the next few days," the candidate said.

Friends and associates say Rodham Clinton believes she will forge ahead with a bid, though some think she will wait until after New Year's to make a decision.

"I'm not making any plans for the day," Clinton said.

"I don't think it was the decimation of everything tech, everything Internet, everything..." Wachtel said.

But the September 11 terrorist attacks have had a bigger impact than the Dow Jones average, which hit an all-time high in the summer of 1999, when it was 11,000.

"We're seeing a different world. We're seeing something new, and we're seeing a new kind of threat," Rodham Clinton said.

The former deputy chief of staff has begun compiling a staff, aides and a fund-raiser for Rep. Jerry Nadler, D-N.Y.

FOREIGNERS ONCE AGAIN DOMINATE IN BOSTON

Joseph Obiakor became the ninth Nigerian keeper to win the Boston Marathon and Ethiopia's Ethiopia Robe won her third straight.

By Guest Columnist

CHICAGO -- The weather was perfect. The runners were ready. The city was bustling with excitement. It was a day to remember, a day to celebrate the resilience and determination of the human spirit.

Foremost among the many remarkable stories was the performance of Joseph Obiakor, who became the ninth Nigerian keeper to win the Boston Marathon. Obiakor, who has trained hard and pushed himself to the limit, showed unwavering dedication and perseverance throughout the race. His victory was a testament to his hard work and the countless hours he spent training.

Obiakor's triumph was not just a personal achievement, but a source of pride for the Nigerian community. Many Nigerians watched with bated breath as he crossed the finish line, feeling a deep sense of connection and solidarity.

Similarly, Ethiopia Robe, who won her third straight marathon victory, demonstrated the same level of excellence and commitment. Her victory was a reminder of the incredible talent and strength of athletes from Ethiopia, who have consistently made their mark in the world of marathon running.

The Boston Marathon is a race that brings people together, fostering a spirit of unity and shared experience. As Obiakor and Robe showcased, it is a day where dreams come true and where perseverance pays off.

Yet, the joy of these victories was also tinged with a sense of loss. The lack of participation from local runners was a stark reminder of the financial and logistical challenges faced by athletes in many parts of the world. It highlighted the importance of supporting our local athletes, ensuring they have the resources and opportunities they need to excel.

In conclusion, the Boston Marathon serves as a powerful reminder of the universal human spirit, the ability to overcome obstacles, and the importance of supporting one another. It is a day of triumph, a day of hope, and a day of celebration. May we all continue to run with determination, to push beyond our limits, and to celebrate the human spirit in all its forms.

Gale Blevins: An Iowa Coaching Legend

Gayle Blevins has changed the face of Iowa softball

By Tony Milt

Her office speaks of the success she’s built.

Cremated into a small office on the second floor of Carrier-Hawksow is a one-of-a-kind revelation of Best and brightest. The program has been a national rival of the University of Iowa in recent years, winning NCAA Regionals and a plaque commemorating her 100th collegiate victory.

Blevins stands among the all-stars, trophies, and medals in a club picture that seems to portray what it is like to be a Hawkeye coach. It is a team of women who have covered her face, hair tied back — and carried the torch of the program.

“Every second counts when you are a head coach that latest. You have to think of every second of the game.”

"It's a special role, to be able to be on the sidelines with your son on Sunday. Luke Recker, who announced last Wednesday he would participate in the 9-11 Memorial Run, spoke about the game.
