UI plans new East Side rec center

By Troy Dow

Within the next five years, UI students could enjoy a new recreation center on the East Side of campus, complete with two indoor pools, full-length basketball courts, and a racquetball court.

The proposed $400,000 facility, which would be built on the riverfront next to North Hall, would also include a small weight room and a large fitness room, according to the UI’s director of recreational services, Harry Beemer.

It would be located on the current site of the Iowa City water plant, said Ray Beemer, an associate director of recreational services. The facility would be made through a bond referendum set for five years.

"For years, I have been pursuing a need for a new East Side recreation facility with the administration," Beemer said. "The UI administration has finally seen the need in the facility."

Francee Hall, the only UI recreation facility on the East Side of campus, was built in 1935.

However, Beemer said, the proposed new center would be larger and located closer to the residence halls. The costs of renovating the former facility in Hall for the current facility cost $400,000, with an additional $390,000 paid each year.

Payments of the bonds would be needed for construction and upkeep of the new facility.

Area population shoots up in 1990s

A growing local economy is responsible for the increase.

Glenn Layton

"The Iowa City area population has grown steadily in the last two decades," said Dr. Albrecht, Pewaukee's assistant director of university relations. "The number of people in Iowa City and Coralville has increased through the 1990s, according to the U.S. Census.

"The Iowa City campus grew 19 percent, from 9,258 in 1987 to 11,903 in 1997. Coralville jumped 22.6 percent, from 16,413 in 1987, packing in the top spot in 1997. David Beemer, Iowa City's development coordinator, believes that the increase is the result of a growing local economy.

"The driving force is the growing employment opportunities in Iowa City," he said. "It is challenging to say that the climate in the city has grown steadily through the 1990s, Beemer said, and consequently, employment opportunities and population have expanded.

"The city, with 11,903 full-time employees and 22,205 part-time employees — in itself the largest employer, plays a vital role in population growth."

A construction worker was paid as a new apartment complex in the 1990s. But now, the facility is full of students willing to pay the extra money for the new facility.

UI officials say the interest rate hike is unlikely to affect students.

By Kathy Wilson

The Daily Iowan

The Federal Reserve's Wednesday move to raise interest rates for the first time in two years is unlikely to be detrimental to student loans, UI officials say.

"I don't think we will see any effect on interest rates, or in the consumer market for student financial aid," said UI President William Albrecht. "I don't know how much credit card companies will raise interest rates, but UI students will be hit by this.

"We all have to be careful about what credits do to interest rates. We are not planning for bigger and better things, but, on the other hand, we are not planning for smaller and smaller things.

"I think we are planning for a scenario where UI students will be hit by this.

"I am not going to worry about this. The other scenario might be that UI students will be hit by this.

Group organizes to save Hickory Hill Park

New development and expansion is threatening the park's perimeter, some local residents say.

A group of Hickory Hill residents met Wednesday night to discuss the destruction of Hickory Hill Park, whose borders, they say, are being threatened by nearby developments.

The Orchard Company, an environmental and ecological nonprofit organization, has decided to put up a 10-story busy work near the park because of the potential for a new development agreement.

"We're really excited to have the number of prescription drugs in the park," said Kimberly Roberts, an Orchard Community official. "We're not sure it doesn't happen," she said. "If there isn't a strong citizen organizing effort, the park will be further deterred at the real of the expenses."

The group plans to meet again on Tuesday at the Iowa City Library Public Services, 125 N. Linn St. The group has decided to meet together to address the park's preservation issues.

Paul Engle and I co-founded the International Writing Program at the UI in 1969. Longtime UI professor Paul Miller, a former UI student, chaired the IP until he died in 2006. His son, Daniel Miller, has since filled his father's shoes. During our time with the IP, we brought more than 500 writers from 60 countries for several months each year from Asia, Africa, Latin America, Eastern Europe and Western Europe. The IP also sponsored international literary conferences and discussion of writing to each other, in each other's countries. The IP and the International Writing Program is well known across the globe for its high-quality programs that bring more than Eastern Europe and Western Europe.

Firecracker 500 returns to Iowa City again this weekend.

By Jeremy Erwin

The outside of Gabe's will be pouring out the sounds of Gabe's this weekend, when the venue plays host to its annual marathon of music.

Unlike in years past, when the festival featured a variety of music and garage bands, this year's event promises to be a much more cohesive line-up featuring artists from the country-rock genre and for Fly Boys, a western rock band from New Mexico.

The festival's zenith may be expected during the five-band lineup that features Thee Lordy Serpents and is set to knock off the evening, dressed in its Scepters for openers, followed by the Fly Boys and the Bent Scepters at 9 p.m.

This sounds like a lineup this diverse, we're anticipating a much wider audience than we've had in the past, when the venue played host to its annual post-Downtown Iowa festival boasted of mainly indie and experimental blues, and in turn, cater to trash-rock favorites The New Duncan Imperials. Purdue basketball team slapped with two years probation

By J.R. Nom ASSOCIATED PRESS

Purdue basketball coach Bob Knight had no intention of waiving his team's two-year probation when he said he would accept it Wednesday night.

Knight reported to the Big Ten news conference in Champaign, Ill., to announce the team's probation was upheld by the NCAA for the second time in three years.

"We have no choice. We accept the penalty," Knight said. "I want to make it clear that I am not happy with this decision, but I have no choice."

"This is a sad day for us, but there are some good things that can come out of this," Knight said. "Some people have tried to make this a 'Knight for New York' story. I disagree."

New York Knicks drafted former Hawkeye David Stern after being named by the Chicago Bulls in the first round of the NBA Draft Wednesday.

The Bulls fan base has been divided whether Knight will accept the penalty when he said he would accept it Wednesday night.

"We have no choice. We accept the penalty," Knight said. "I want to make it clear that I am not happy with this decision, but I have no choice."

Outfielder Pat Burrell and third baseman Todd Zeile were taken in the first round of the draft.

Burrell, who played his high school and college ball at Duke, was selected by the San Francisco Giants with the fourth overall pick in the draft.

Zeile, who played his high school ball at Oklahoma State, was taken by the Milwaukee Brewers with the 13th overall pick.

"I am very comfortable with the situation where we are," Knight said. "We have a lot of good young talent coming in and a lot of experience coming back."

Report: Stevenson's father is Julius Erving

By Bill Hayes, The Daily Iowan

Iowa State and its' midfielders will have a starting unit that is advancing to the next level. It's a small unit, but it has the potential to be a team that is capable of scoring goals with good tactical play.

REMEMBER THE NAME

The first time I saw the name of the Iowa State midfielders, I was impressed. The young men are quick, athletic, and have a great understanding of the game. They are capable of making good decisions and have good ball control.

Iowa State's midfielders are a group of young men who are in the process of developing their skills. They are working hard to improve and are eager to show what they can do on the field.
