Iowa City

The Iowa City Community School District Foundation and the Region 8 Foundation will be the new benefactors of funds raised by Iowa City School District on July 27. Race officials announced the donation will be divided equally between the two foundations.

If the fund-raising event is successful, the money will be divided equally between the two foundations.

The two foundations have a long tradition of working together. They have worked together in the past to support the Iowa City Community School District.

The Iowa City Community School District Foundation was founded in 1982, and the Region 8 Foundation was founded in 1985. The two foundations have a long tradition of working together to support the Iowa City Community School District.

By Jim Reed

More than a year after the drug-related death of Frank Lee and before his preliminary hearing, a 17-year-old man was sentenced to 27 years in prison for drug charges.

Jim Reed, on July 20, was sentenced to 27 years in prison for drug charges, according to the Illinois State's Attorney's office.

In addition, Mr. Reed pleaded guilty to possession of a firearm after a preliminary hearing.

The charges stem from a June 22, 1998, arrest at 12:01 a.m. in the 100 block of South St. Joseph Street in Linn County.

Mr. Reed is accused of possessing a firearm, which carries a life-sentence, and he's being held at the Linn County Jail.

But that happened after another arrest, which Mr. Reed admitted to in the preliminary hearing.

"His participation with regard to Egerton's death was a mistake," said Cook County State's Attorney John K. Brennan Jr.

By Steve Schemmel

The city's downtown bar scene has been a popular gathering place for many years, but the past few years have seen a rise in alcohol-related incidents.

Bar managers say they have seen a decrease in the number of incidents, but they are still concerned about public intoxication and other related problems.

"It's been a challenge," said one manager, who asked not to be named.

"We've had a decrease in incidents, but there are still some problems we are trying to address," the manager said.

Republican tax cut is a bad idea

Last week, the House of Representatives approved a $310 billion tax-cut bill that does all the wrong things at the wrong time. The economy is in great shape because people think it's a sure thing, wandering where the bubble is going to pop. Americans in all income brackets feel that they actually have more money because wages are rising, unemployment is low, and costs are falling. People who are really having a good time, however, are the chief Architects, who have made fortunes from this stock-market boom.

So what are Republicans planning to do? They have decided that taxpayers need a break. This is wrong. Th.) Republicans are really saying, in effect, "the U.S. economy needs no further stimulus. It would be like giving coffee to a hyperactive child. Tax cuts encourage people and businesses to spend more and save less. This should be saved for times of financial distress, to boost the economy.

But not only is the wrong time for a tax cut. This bill means less money back in people who need it the least right now: poor Americans. The bill lowers the capital gains tax, which is a burden for middle-income people. The people who really are having a good time, however, are the chief Architects, who have made fortunes from this stock-market boom.

Letter to the Editor

Make campaign-finance reform an issue

Major kick at the arty pro-senatorial candidates to get their careers launched, the reform furore is now going to play its role in their party primaries. Republican Senator John McCain of Arizona, who once courted the nomination from the right, is now in a tough fight with his conservative friend, Senator tea party militants. John Breaux, Sr., Vice Chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, is not amused. "We've already seen the Senate hear from Alan Greenspan, the widely respected economist. Before the Senate. The majority - the middle class and poor - do not share equal voice in our democracy if the corrupting influence of money in politics is not harnessed.

Some senators, Majority Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi and Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, are pushing for a tax cut this year. In the Senate, this would only increase the tax burden at the wrong time. It's also a vote against your column is what you should pack it up and leave. Th. end is near! Repent!

Dear President Bush and Mr. McConnell:

Hannah Fons

I have no idea how to say it. I mean, certainly I've never actually asked anyone, ignorant, ill-clad, not very talkable, whatever's in the kitchen - but it's there! That's why we have millions of voters here at the polls. It is obvious that the new tax bill can not be considered to support a political candidate.

Dear Christine Hall:

Absorbing the slings and arrows of the public

You know, I don't really care much for summer. I don't like the heat and humidity, I hate the bugs, and I hate the frustration of having to comb through what is essentially a cool-weather wardrobe to find stuff to wear every day.

Besides, with heavier clothes comes heavier breathing. If you want to catch my breath, my shirt will be the first to know.

But outside from all that, I thought that because there's almost nothing to do this time of year - which is good, incidentally, for all those who want nothing to do and nothing in particular is happening that might suggest a full-blooded baby banner year, I might take this time to go out and see the world. To do this, I have some clothes. Here are some of my favorite clothes that I own:

- My jeans
- My t-shirts
- My shorts
- My sneakers
- My backpack

Of course, there's a lot that is not quite right with my wardrobe. For instance, I own a lot of new clothes. However, I don't use them very much. They are just there in case I should need them. As for why I'm wearing them, I'll go through the above reasoning regarding what I'm wearing.

Dear Elliott Young,

How come you think you're in a smart suit and everyone seems to know what's going on in your career? Can you try again? I'll go through the above reasoning regarding what I'm wearing.

Dear Christie Hall:

What are you playing all the time? You have a tough childhood!

But you spend a lot of your time alone, or do you have any other hobbies at all? Years from now, you'll be wondering.

Dear President Bush:

D.B.

I've never heard of you in my life. I did a lot of time in the military as a draftee. I was only in my unit veterans here - then I had real, live children to laugh. As to why I'm so play - see the above reasoning regarding what I'm wearing.

House uses 'emergency' powers to pad budget

If content is an "emergency," then it must be crunch time for the budget, House appropriators reportedly believe.

By Alan Frumin, Associated Press

Washington - The House's first Republican majority declared one week ago that the Constitution has required it to act - and the Appropriations Committee has been forced to respond.

This week's plan was to finish before the Memorial Day recess, but House leaders appear to have backed down.

"The Appropriations Committee will do its best to finish the job," said the House Appropriations Committee's chairman, Rep. John M. Roomer, R-Md.

In a predominately urban society of more than 180,000 residents, the attitude at the fair demonstrates that it appeals to urban as well as rural people, officials said.

"It's a great opportunity to just watch those wonderful events," said the fair's headliner, Dr. Joseph Belman.

The track-and-trick pull and the grandstand performance Thursday should also bring out the crowds, Belman said.

The Haunting scares with cliches with

by John Mullan

It's a sly that The Haunting should come out in time to be the last of the new wave of haunted-house movies, filling in the long-standing traditions of the genre with the trappings of art history, legends, and other things that go bump in the night. They are, however, very different from the other movies in this genre.

Wise's movie is a ghost story about the burned house, not the burned victims. It's about the men and women who moved into the house and the stories that were told about them. It's not about the house's haunted history, but rather the way that the house and its inhabitants were perceived by those who lived there.

The story is based on the novel of the same name by Shirley Jackson, whose book was a seminal work in the genre. It's about a family who moves into a house that was once a mental asylum and is filled with the memories of those who lived there. The family is haunted by the ghosts of the patients who once occupied the asylum, and they must come to terms with the past in order to move forward.

The movie is a study of the way that the past can affect the present, and the way that the present can shape the future. It's about the ways that the past can be remembered and the ways that it can be forgotten.

By Mort Mullin

In 1998, she was finishing her novel Shred Dialogues, a chilling look at the world of psychic mediumship. In 1999, she was diagnosed with ovarian cancer, and in 2000, she died. Her book was never published.

Though Davenport had had her own brushes with the supernatural, she was as surprised as anyone when she was made a medium. She did it in a telepathic interview with The Daily Telegraph, who asked her if she "didn't want to do what people know?" She wondered if she was ready to do what people know? She wondered if she was ready to do what people know?

The comfort women told of being held captive as sex slaves at Japanese army base during World War II, the lives of thousands of women during those years. The story, which Davenport said had much of the same tone, is about the way that the experiences of these women can still be felt today. The story is about the way that these women can still be remembered.

The story was set in Japan, but it could have been set in any number of countries around the world. The story is about the way that the experiences of these women can still be remembered.

The movie is entertaining (and creepy), with a number of jump scare moments, and then half-way through, the movie bursts into a collage of trilobyte story lines that are generated by effects voices that are generated by effects. The movie is a study of the way that the past can affect the present, and the way that the present can shape the future. It's about the ways that the past can be remembered and the ways that it can be forgotten.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico - Just when it looked like the United States might be on the verge of pulling away for the gold medal, the Americans squandered the lead and were forced to turn a close game into a blowout.

The championship game of the Tournament of the Americas for the Americas early in the second half was called on the field of 42 points after the United States had scored 16 points in the ninth inning.

The winning team scored their first run in the sixth inning off of United States star pitcher Michael Jordan.

The United States overcame an early 2-0 deficit and scored four unanswered runs in the sixth inning to take control of the game.

The United States went on to win the Olympic gold medal for the first time since 1980.
