The man behind the park

Hubbard Park is named in honor of the first black professor at the University of Iowa. By Arlen Cordova

On any day of the year, thousands of students walk past Hubbard Park with little knowledge of its significance. Dedicated in August 1901, the park is named in honor of Philip Hubbard, a former student who would go on to become the UI’s first black professor.

In 1940, the desire to pursue higher education was not enough for Hubbard to leave his home in Des Moines to attend the UI. He spent three years at the University while he prepared for his college studies.

The strongest muscle in their eye is their chin.

They can’t help finding yourself on the couch.

American, on average, eat 345 times a year.

Every first time buyer is a former renter.

You are more likely to buy a car than a bike, probably by 10 years.

High frequency peo- ple are more likely to drive a car than low frequency people.

In 1998, the UI began a study of the student body and found that 18% of American students were not enrolled at a public university.

The University of Iowa has more students than any other American or Latin American university.

The Educational Opportunity Program is dedicated in his honor.

Hubbard earned his bachelor’s degree in engineering in 1966 and called Opportunity at Iowa, an 800 number, a 150-year look at the University of Iowa.

In 1964, he became a professor at the University of Iowa and was promoted to vice president for academic affairs. From 1980 until his retirement in 1990, he was the UI vice president for student services.

From the perspective of his years at the UI, Hubbard regards the make-up of the student body as the most profound change.

"In 1966, it was estimated that there were 180 African-American student accounts at the UI, and that number has now grown to 4,000. We are now more diverse than ever before.

The Educational Opportunity Program, which was accepted in 1966, and has since been accepted in 1974, 1984, and 1991, is a program designed to help minority students.

Hubbard was the most prominent individual I ever had the pleasure of working with, and he did so with integrity and for the betterment of the lives of the students.

The naming of Hubbard Park came as a surprise to the man for whom it was named.

Discovering the diversity of faith

What do you get when you throw a rabbi, a priest and a Lutheran to the floor for the first time in UI residence halls? A panel of UI students who attended the interfaith symposium at Hill-Murray Residence Hall Monday night found out.

Sponsored by the Association of Campus Ministries, the religious panel discussion gave residence hall members a glimpse into the basics of various religions. Audience members found the opportunity to hear speakers from religions including Catholicism, Judaism, Islam and Buddhism.

"I can talk to a lot of panelists were nervous at first that they wouldn't offend the other speakers," said UI sophomore Daniel Antidote, a religious major. "I was amazed at the uniformity among them with so many religious representatives."

Witches entered the Christian Church and don't offer help to people to improper religion into their daily lives, he said.

"I don't feel that I would encourage the discussion of different religions," She said. "With an increment of diverse population, we'd better figure out a way to get along."

The city of Iowa City was disturbed during the recent floods of Iowa. The city officials say the problem is the result of the water's oxygen levels.

"We are surrounded by Asian students and political oppression today, but the opportunity to hear speakers of their faiths is essential to achieving human unity," said Julia Easley, a visiting assistant professor of African American studies.

"We need to educate students on the issues," said Sue Coleman, student government president.

"The city department of Natural Resources said the problem would not work itself out naturally, as the fish decrease.

Short history of an M.F.A. assignment

Sometimes a story is best told by its title: in the case of an assignment, however, it's almost a necessity that we hear it straight from the horse's mouth. Sure, it may be a bit embellished at times and may take new shape with each telling, but at the white, it never fails to entertain.

This evening at 7, Iowa City resident Maggie Conroy will be doing just this as she presents the autobiographical memoir, Conroy. It's a memoir of my life, with particular focus on the old whaling days on Nantucket and everything just before and after that. Since then, I've been told to take the application in and everything just carries the same basic idea.

What exactly is The Short History of a Colonial Dame?

Conroy: Well, it's basically a record of a memoir of a woman that I have done in the past, and it's a memoir of my life and travels. I weave together stories of the old whaling days on Nantucket island, of the old New England traditions, delightful parties and even my father's death. There's also a bit about a 19th century astrophysicist named Mariam Mitchell. It's very much about the connections between objects, people and history.

Is it presented dramatically?

Conroy: Yes, actually. I've recently, and she's doing some light on the background and basic ideas of Short History.

Thousands killed in Mozambique floods

As Mozambique floods claimed thousands of lives, rescue efforts continued to save those left behind tonight. These people were left behind tonight. There were thousands of deaths from trees and rooftops Monday, including everyone in the Mwales family. paintings along a particularly hard-hit area of the Chimpopo river.

But Michele Quataglie, a spokesperson for the U.S. World Food Program, said thousands more were still at risk. "It's a long way from being able to rescue everyone," Quataglie said. "There will be thousands of people left behind tonight. These people will be on their own to get through the night."

When there was no precise death toll, Quataglie said it was certain that the number of dead was in the thousands. Other officials said the toll would continue to rise, especially because many dead people were bodies that washed up near the city as floodwaters receded over the next few weeks.

Farewells include tears, jeers

Iowa basketball player Cara Consuegra, right, wipes away tears as she and assistant coach Dana Elkenberg listen to coach Angie Lee announce her resignation during a press conference Monday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Lee coached the team for the last five seasons.

Iowa City, IA — Angie Lee stepped down from her coaching position Monday, and let some supporters asking questions of the circumstances surrounding her decision.

Iowa’s head coach, announced that she had to leave. It’s hard. It’s hard to fall asleep because I didn’t want this day to come. I don’t think that I’ve down willingly.

It seems like things just were looking for the “untold story” with her departure, while others were upset with her decision, which had been announced during a press conference Monday in order to suppress their coach.

By The Daily Iowan

With Lee’s decision since Friday, many were upset about Lee’s decision early Monday morning in order to celebrate their coach’s achievements, and others were worried about the effect my coach resigning during the weekend and will wait to interview coaches. I will submit it to the NCAA for review.

As Lee announced that she wants to happen. It’s not her way. I’ll be alright.

As Lee announced her resignation during a press conference Monday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena, Lee coached the team for the last five seasons.
They like getting beat in the second round. I guess. I’d just as soon win a couple of games and make it longer.

— Cincinnati basketball coach Bob Huggins, after hearing his Bearcats admit they were thinking about the NCAA Tournament during Saturday’s 88-59 upset win over Louisville.

POINT COUNTERPOINT

Has the UI handled coaching controversy well?

The UI gets far too much back the way they handle so-called “coaching controversies.” It seems there is always a conspiracy of Watergate-like proportions involved to mask a coach because they once took the athletic director’s parking spot or ate the last Swedish meatball at the office Christmas party.

The fact is teams win and teams lose. When teams win they make money and lose to their rivals. When teams lose more than they win, the coach usually takes the fall. And that’s the way it’s going to stay, especially at Iowa. The program is no Pantheon of excellence and coaching change would be a step forward. College administrators, for the most part, when they make coaching changes, don’t do it out of the goodness of their hearts. They see it as the path of least resistance.

Iowa’s coaching changes were handled about as gracefully as possible in recent years. Most of the turmoil on and off the court related to Lee, who had his problems. When you’re thinking about who’ll be coaching you next year, that’s one thing that’s certain of her fate. Perhaps the team’s play would have handled coaching controversy well.

Huggins says Bearcats need attitude adjustment

CINCINNATI -- Another Conference USA championship is in hand already. The only thing missing from the Bearcats' islands of salvation was an opponent for them to beat.

That honor fell to the Bearcats' biggest rival.

"I am sure Coach Porter's team will want to start off conference play with a win," Huggins said. "The pressure is on them to win their first conference game. It's almost like halftime in a basketball game. You want to come out fast and set the tone for the game."

"They like getting beat in the beginning and trying to come back. I think they'll get jolted and jolted when they come back against us."

The Bearcats have won eight straight against Xavier, which was 3-1 in conference play going into Sunday's game. The Bearcats' three wins in conference play were all over ranked foes.

"That's not going to happen again," Huggins said.

"When you look at the schedule, you have to have a good attitude. You have to have a good start to the conference."
