Grant resigns as Iowa women's A.D.

Christine Grant, one of the leaders in her field, will step down on Aug. 31 after 27 years at the helm.

By Bridget Studer

Grant will resign from her position at the University of Iowa after Aug. 31, when the university announced Monday she was presiding over a national search for the replacement of UD head, former President Sue Tjora.

Grant has been a fixture in the world of women's athletics, and as UD President Mary Susan Coleman said, "I am thinking about the differences that Christine will make in the lives of so many young women who have worked so hard to achieve their dreams."

The great state of Texas, as every single person in there must call it, is facing enormous economic challenges, with the state's fiscal position being the most pressing issue of the moment.

The state's budget deficit is estimated to be over $20 billion, with the state's revenue projections falling short of expectations. This has led to a number of cutbacks and layoffs in state government agencies, as well as a reduction in services for citizens. The state's tax base has also been affected by the decline in oil and gas prices, with many oil-dependent communities seeing significant declines in revenue.

Moreover, the state's education system is facing significant challenges, with schools struggling to provide adequate resources and support to students. The state's public schools have been hit hard by funding cuts, with many schools forced to reduce their budgets and lay off teachers.

The state's healthcare system is also facing significant challenges, with many hospitals struggling to provide quality care to patients. The state's Medicaid program is facing significant pressure, with many low-income individuals struggling to find affordable healthcare.

The state's infrastructure is also in need of significant investment, with many roads and bridges in need of repair or replacement. The state's water supply is also facing significant challenges, with many communities struggling to provide clean and safe drinking water.

The state's economy is also facing significant challenges, with many businesses struggling to remain competitive in a rapidly changing global market. The state's unemployment rate is also high, with many residents struggling to find work.

The state's political climate is also characterized by significant division, with a number of political leaders engaged in bitter disputes over the state's budget and other issues. The state's political culture is also characterized by a lack of consensus, with many policymakers struggling to agree on solutions to the state's most pressing problems.

In conclusion, the state of Texas is facing significant challenges, with its fiscal, education, healthcare, infrastructure, and economic systems all in need of significant investment and support. The state's leaders must find a way to work together to address these challenges and provide a better future for all Texans.

As surplus grows, Clinton pushes drug deal

The surpluses now projected at $1.67 trillion, the president wants to trade tax cuts for a drug plan.

By Alphonse Press and Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton Monday projected an estimated $1.67 trillion budget surplus for the next decade and asked Republicans to let him trade $50 billion in tax cuts for a drug plan. A few hours later, he was facing the prospect of a Republican filibuster aimed at blocking any legislation to provide prescription drug coverage for the elderly.

The president's new strategy, which came a day after House Republicans enacted a tax-cut bill, was aimed at convincing Senate Republicans to drop their opposition to legislation to provide prescription drug coverage for Medicare recipients at least through 2000.

"This is the real key to moving prescription drug coverage for Medicare patients," the president said in his first public comments on the issue since the House approved its bill last week. "This is where the real disagreement is." The House bill would provide a one-time $50 billion subsidy to provide partial prescription drug coverage for Medicare recipients.

Mr. Clinton estimated that his proposed drug plan would save $150 billion over 10 years. But the plan would cost $130 billion over a decade.

"We can't afford to do both," President Clinton said. "We can't afford to do both."

Israel to concede onقدس, reports say

A Palestinian official says the state is willing to concede on the security barrier issue. The official said that the Israeli government has agreed to continue talks on the security barrier, which is a key issue in the Israeli-Palestinian peace process. The official added that the Israeli government has agreed to consider a proposal by the Palestinian Authority to establish a securityzone along the border between the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The Palestinian Authority has been pushing for the establishment of a securityzone in the West Bank to prevent militants from entering Israeli territory.

"When I first ran, I was prepared to be the next great district athlete," Grant said. "But I was not prepared to be the next great district athlete." He added that he had not expected to win the race.

Grant's resignation comes after a series of controversies involving the school's track and field program. The program has been under scrutiny for several years, with allegations of academic fraud and ethical violations.

Zimbabwe opposition celebrates

As an election result trickle in, the opposition party is gaining ground in significant victories.

HARARE, Zimbabwe—Supporters of the opposition party had a reason to celebrate as election results from Monday's polls in the country's 40-year-old independence struggle began trickling in.

Zimbabwe's main opposition parties, the Democratic Change for Zimbabwe and the Movement for Democratic Change, were expected to make significant gains in the country's parliamentary elections and mayoral races. The first results from the opposition parties' stronghold of Bulawayo showed a significant lead for the Movement for Democratic Change, led by Nelson Chamisa.

Zimbabwe police warn of a group opposition Movement For Democrats Change reporters to denounce in downtown Harare. In early results, the Movement for Democratic Change was leading in the capital, Harare, and in the country's second-largest city, Bulawayo. The party's leader, Chamisa, had called on his supporters to vote against the ruling party, the Zanu-PF, and its leader, Emmerson Mnangagwa.

"The important thing is that we just want more than twice as much," she said. "We need a lot more." Police were deployed through the city to control any possible unrest. But police were sent to the southwest of Harare, the party's stronghold, in response to reports of violence.

The official said the Israeli parliament offered programs that would increase the amount of budgetary resources for the security barrier. He said that the numbers were too high and that the Israeli government should consider offering a lower amount.

The Supreme Court's decision was a victory for the rights of individual citizens in the face of government power. It emphasized the importance of protecting individuals from overzealous law enforcement and the need for careful review of police interrogations.

Bush, courting Latinos, says he'll split INS

WASHINGTON—George W. Bush told Latino business leaders Tuesday that he would consider splitting the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which oversees the nation's borders and naturalization processes, and focusing on enforcement and legislation for illegal immigrants. Bush also told lawmakers that he would consider creating a new INS department, separate from the Homeland Security Department, to deal specifically with illegal immigrants.

"It's not just a matter of course; it's a matter of pragmatism," he said. "We need a new department to focus on illegal immigration." Bush also told lawmakers that he was considering creating a new INS department, separate from the Homeland Security Department, to deal specifically with illegal immigrants.

"We need to take a look at all the reforms surrounding what happened, before, during and after the event, including what we said in the response and what we said in the aftermath," he said. "We need to make sure that the response and the aftermath are dealt with appropriately.

"And we need to ensure that the response and the aftermath are dealt with appropriately," he said. "And we need to make sure that the response and the aftermath are dealt with appropriately."

The Simpsons is an American animated sitcom television series created and produced by Matt Groening. The series, produced by Bongo Buns, is a collaboration between Fox Broadcasting Company and a subsidiary of the Simpson family. The show is set in the fictional city of Springfield, and follows the misadventures of a dysfunctional family. The show has been praised for its non-linear storytelling and dark humor, and has become one of the longest-running series in television history.

The Simpsons is a prime example of what is known as a "dining room" TV show. These shows are characterized by their ability to engage audiences with complex storylines and characters, and are often referred to as "dual" because they can be watched at lunch or dinner. The show’s success has led to the creation of many spin-off shows, including The Simpsons Movie and The Simpsons: Treehouse of Horror. The show’s popularity has also led to a large number of Simpsons-themed merchandise, including clothing, toys, and even a Simpsons-themed restaurant.

In conclusion, The Simpsons is a groundbreaking and beloved show that has become a cultural phenomenon. Its ability to balance humor and drama has made it a favorite of audiences of all ages, and its enduring popularity is a testament to its unique and talented creators.
