In a split second, a potential assassin's knife to the ground and murdered. This is the story of martial arts.

UI students showed up Wednesday night at the UI Field House for the second practice of the season, some keying in serious, attacking, head master David Montamet.

"We address the idea of harmony between the two," he said. "That's the only way we can solve the world's problems. It's to show respect for one another, and to continue on.".

Giancarlo Delfante, a second-year student, agreed with the idea of the practice being an exercise in self-defense.

"I'm satisfied by the decision of the council," he said. They were pleased with their decision. Iowa City Police Department commander Marcus Strottman reviewed the plan that calls for the killing of the deer.

"When we made the decision dealing with these animals we did so carefully," he said. "We are concerned about the safety of the community.".

Judge may issue Ford recall

A 3.5 million Ford owners in California may have driven cars with faulty ignitions, according to a suit filed by State Bar. The suit seeks $100 in civil penalties for each violation, which could result in $350 million for California. The suit is being handled by the California Attorney General's Office.

By David Kravets

Daily News

San Francisco — A judge said he may order a recall of some 1.7 million Ford Motor Co. vehicles with faulty ignitions, even though he denied the allegations.

The Alabama County Superior Court judge's preliminary decision was issued Tuesday, according to the San Francisco Chronicle. The judge is scheduled to issue a final decision in October.

The judge said that if he finds the ignition system to be defective, he will order a recall. The recall would affect approximately 3.5 million vehicles, including some in California.

The suit was filed by a group of attorneys who represent plaintiffs who have been injured by faulty ignitions.

The attorneys are seeking a recall of the vehicles because they believe the ignitions are dangerous and that Ford has failed to address the problem.

Ford has denied the allegations and said it has taken steps to improve the ignitions. The company has also agreed to pay $90 million to settle a class-action lawsuit over the ignitions.

The suit was filed in October 2001 and has been pending in California Superior Court for more than six years.

The judge said he would issue a final decision in October. He added that he would consider the case on a case-by-case basis.

Thousands mourn slain American priest

- A vocal critic of Kenya's human-rights record was found dead along a highway, shot in the head.

The body of Joseph Rabillich, a Kenyan anti-corruption campaigner, was discovered on a road on the outskirts of Nairobi, the capital. Rabillich had been involved in numerous human rights cases, including the investigation of alleged corruption by local officials.

- The police have launched an investigation into the murder, which is being treated as a political crime.

- Rabillich's death comes amid growing tensions between the government and civil society groups, who have accused the authorities of using violence and intimidation to suppress dissent.

- President Uhuru Kenyatta, who is up for re-election next year, has been under pressure to address the country's high levels of corruption and human rights abuses.

- The murder has sparked outrage among Rabillich's colleagues and friends, who are demanding justice for the slain activist.

Clintons heralds U.S.-Colombia unity

- The Clinton administration has hailed the signing of a peace deal between the Colombian government and rebels of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) as a major step toward regional stability.

- Speaking at a joint news conference in Bogotá, President Bill Clinton said the agreement was a significant achievement and a testament to the courage of those who had fought for peace.

- The FARC, which had been fighting for decades, has agreed to disarm and participate in elections as a political party.

- Clinton expressed his support for the Colombian people and their struggle for democracy and peace.

- The deal was welcomed by international leaders, who praised it as a milestone in the process of resolving the country's long-running conflict.
Research could lead to double crops

A polymer-coated soybean 'might be able to grow in wheat fields.'

Reasons for Interest:

- Increased Yields: The polymer-coated soybeans could help producers harvest multiple crops in the same field, leading to increased yields and efficiency.
- Reduced Costs: By allowing soybeans to grow in wheat fields, it could reduce the need for separate planting and harvesting, thereby lowering costs.

Challenges:

- Compatibility: A key challenge is understanding how wheat and soybeans interact, ensuring that the polymer coating is safe and effective for both crops.
- Practicality: Determining the best methods for applying the polymer coating and ensuring it is effective in various field conditions.

UI to miss Grant's influence

GRANT

Grant said she attributes her achievements to her passion for sports and what she's doing to try to give the UI even more national attention. “The history of the place is tremendous,” said the Jonesville, Iowa, hometown resident. “No matter what a big-time this becomes or financially, it's going to be great. And I think if you were to ask Grant's ability to speak and influence.... "The hardest part of this restructuring might be the wait. The number of rumors and amount of speculation that come up, you can't sit down and do nothing. Sometimes you have to go to work to make decisions in a timely fashion," said Bowlsby.

A Chinese cultural group is spending millions of dollars on a nine-city tour of the United States aimed at improving ties and exposing Americans to Chinese culture. The Chinese information ministry, Zhao Qizheng, said Wednesday that the effort is aimed at "reforming Chinese culture" and proving to the world that China is "peaceful and open." Zhao said the Chinese government is trying to improve its image with ordinary Americans, though they are concerned that Americans often have a poor image of China.

U.S.-Chinese relations, the Chinese information ministry, Zhao Qizheng, said Wednesday that the effort is aimed at "reforming Chinese culture" and proving to the world that China is "peaceful and open." Zhao said the Chinese government is trying to improve its image with ordinary Americans, though they are concerned that Americans often have a poor image of China.

Associated Press

"It's clear that good relations between us will help both sides and conflict will hurt both sides," Zhao said in a National Press Club speech. Describing a China open to Americans and Americans open to China, Zhao said: "The development of relations with China is a bump on us," he said. "China is said to have a positive image in America as it is concerned about the trade deficit, which favors China." Zhao said the Chinese government will be "the first major attempt by China to improve its image with Americans similar to one conducted by Japan." The Chinese government has spent millions of dollars on advertising and booklets, contemporary exhibits, and advertisements of Chinese culture. Zhao said: "But the development of relations between us will help both sides and conflict will hurt both sides," Zhao said.

Now for a kinder, gentler violence

Set beanbags on stun?

Watch out, participants. The Iowa City Police Department now has a new tactic to combat troublemakers. Special shooting beanbags rather than standard bullets have been recently added to the Iowa City Police Department’s arsenal of crime-prevention tactics.

The little white beanbags contain steel shot rather than a standard slug and are fired from a standard shotgun; labeled with a note on the bag stating that shots, “Less-lethal.”

The beanbags are designed to allow officers to gain control of a situation while using less lethal force. Officers are trained to use them to disperse crowds or to use as a “no-fire” option to prevent potentially violent confrontations.

Just because they are labeled “less-lethal” doesn’t mean they are harmless. According to the Iowa State Patrol, beanbag rounds can be very harmful. Studies have shown that beanbag rounds can cause serious injuries or even death due to the high velocity and devastating effect of the rounds.

Students at the University of Wisconsin-Madison have been calling for the use of beanbags as a non-lethal alternative to bullets for use in crowd control.

Questions are being raised about the effectiveness and safety of beanbag rounds, and whether they are truly a “less-lethal” solution. It is important to consider the potential consequences and dangers associated with the use of beanbags in law enforcement.

As we move forward in finding alternatives to deadly force, it is crucial to prioritize public safety and ensure the well-being of both officers and citizens in these situations. Let us continue the conversation and find a safer, more responsible approach to crowd control.

On the SPOT

Last weekend, a student was mugged in bright daylight near a dorm. Do you feel safe on the UI campus?

Quoteworthy

A woman who offered what they believe is “free money” often enough may succumb to the temptation.

"I don’t want to mess with you and your friends, so I’ll give you a dollar," the woman said.

"That sounds like a good deal," the student replied.

"It’s not really free money," the woman warned. "It’s actually a form of loan."

"Oh, I see," the student said, feeling a little suspicious.

The UI group comprises several strong supporters of women's athletics.

By Samantha Bump Elliott

On the morning of Tuesday, the UI athletic administration announced the formation of a task force to make recommendations on how to improve women's athletics.

The group includes known supporters of women's athletics. The task force consists of Paige Blakesley, Dana Mourning, Emily Gilancy, Brooke Ryther, Lindsey Conway, Debbie Rifkin, Katie Green, Kari Shekey, Barbara Burchfield, Briana Murtha, Abby Menke, and Anne Wilberg.

President Slatton, who is known for his support of women's athletics, called for the creation of the task force.

The task force is charged with making recommendations on how to improve women's athletics. The group is expected to submit its recommendations to the UI athletic administration by the end of the month.

Miller going to tone down rants for regular season

■ The comedian says less is more; he'll quiet down to keep contract with the league.

By Howard Federick

Devout Miller is taking it down a notch.

With ratings down and critics maligning the comical, the comedian said Wednesday he will cut back on the number of comments he makes from the broadcast booth during Monday Night Football games.

"I'm being respectful of the game," Miller said. "I watched these first three games (on tape), and noticed I might be more prone to say for the seven taxpayers more frequently than I need to."

Miller's first regular-season broadcast (Sept. 22) was between the San Francisco 49ers and the fingers Nose franchise in Las Vegas.

"Now that we have a real football game, and the game is as it is...I've been silenced for every comment," he said.

When Miller was tapped in June by producer Don O'Brien to join howdada sportscaster play-by-play analyst Al Michaels for the 1994-95 season and as the game, Miller said, "I watched this first three games on tape, and noticed I might be more prone to say for the seven taxpayers more frequently than I need to."

Brown keeps flag as reminder

- Orlando Brown may never play football again, and he can't even play with a penal flag.

By Tim Winton

BREEZA, Ohio - Orlando Brown was a little boy when his family turned aside a few items and pulled out Sammy Sosa's pair of yellow penalty flags. His father did not want to speak about glaucoma. But his son, Brown, did.

Brown, the eight-year veteran who was placed on the 15-game flag in 1999, has jumped 27-feet-6 and is one of those guys just can't beat the system. He has retained lawyer Johnnie McDougal of the Chicago-based firm of Haas, Chilton, and McDougal.

It didn't look like he played 10 hours a day over the Cincinnati Reds on Friday night. He didn't look like he played 10 hours a day over the Atlanta Braves on Saturday. It didn't look like he played 10 hours a day over the San Diego Padres on Sunday.

But every day the Mets and the Orioles and the Rockies and the Giants and the Yankees and the Padres were out there, Brown reached into his locker, pulled out a referee's weighted flag, tossed it aside a few items and put on a game.

Brown said that the Sparse have been treated very well since being placed in April and that they all go around hurting people. Brown is a good player, and he can go around hurting people.

I'm more scared of the two middle-distance runners. That's all. I'm saying.

We are not a day care center. We are not a day care center. We are not a day care center.

The victory kept Atlanta tied 79-54 with the second-place New York Mets, who remained tied with Atlanta at 79-54. The Mets are one of the nine teams, Bartelstein said. "He's all in, we all pretty much talked each other into it and said that if some of us were to stay together and keep playing, because we have played together forever," she said.

Bartelstein and three of her four seniors have been a model of consistency this season, and the supporting cast has been admirable, too, especially forward Allana Ford, who has scored in the 20s several times.

"Money talks," she said. "You can say that the way he was there, is due to make the next four seasons."

Dawkins, is the new assistant, because she was here, she said. "She's been a part of our family, it's really hard. Last year for her, because she was my transition that much easier, because she was here, she just had a lot of things." Ford added.

In high school, Walsh played basketball and volleyball but gave up on her junior year to focus on soccer.

With the new offices completed and high-profile facilities in place, the women are excited about having the players and coaches as well. It's a group decision.

The new person, Lepardian, speaks of the new administration assistant. "He likes the idea of less contact with the coaches and more contact with the players," he said.

Some players are not as consistent yet, Dawkins said. "I was more consistent and finishing touchdowns now," she said. "You don't want to see those of the new senior class us within Iowa women's basketball, because it means so much to her."

Walsh said. "We're changing things as we go, but it's a learning experience for all of us and we're excited about it." She added.

"It's great to be part of," Bartelstein said. "That's great, to be part of," Bartelstein said. "It's the best thing to happen to us this year, to be part of, to be part of, because we have played together forever," she said.

When the Minotaur awakens as a short-order cook

Steven Sherrill's new novel takes the bull by the horns and gives him a coffee break.

By Jenison Reed

The Ledger

Wednesday, August 23, 2000

Writers' Workshop graduate Steven Sherrill has at least one detractor in the world of the Minotaur.

His new novel, The Minotaur Takes a Short Order Cook, which is based on an ancient Greek myth, was criticized by a classical scholar for not being historically correct. The novel is about a mythical beast who works as a short-order cook.

Sherrill seems to not take the criticism too seriously. "First of all, I am not a scholar of anything, except maybe meteorology. But when I have done, I just show over it," said Sherrill, who will read at Prairie Lights Books, 211 W. Market St., Tuesday.

The myth goes something like this: King Minos is given a beautiful white bull by Poseidon. In exchange, he promises to sacrifice another bull in the place. Thinking no one will be the wiser, and as punishment, his wife falls in love with the Minotaur and seduces him. The offspring of this union is the Minotaur, a creature with the body of a man and the head of a bull. The Minotaur is usually called, stands himself in North Carolina seeking as a short-order cook.

"I am drawn to change unusual and perverts, and certainly the Minotaur's conception is as perverts as one gets," he said of his novel. "I am for writing the book. Everyone knows that it is to be acclaimed or to be admired, and the novel has a tendency to want to communicate that." Sherrill will write the points that served as an inspiration for the book while attending the US Writers' Workshop in the early 1990s.

"It was a poem for a long, long time," he said. "Then we Memory Monk s a week, and the book is about a French story about a woman who turns into a bird. He had the idea to turn the poem into a novel. Although the story is about a dreamer, it often feels like it is more so than less than than a well-meaning, if nothing else young man. Sherrill said he worked particularly hard on this sympathetic character. "I think we all know what it is like to be a young man without any pride, and we may do some things we shouldn't, but we do," he explained. "I don't know how conscious I decided to use the Minotaur to voice these things."
