Harkin votes for China deal

The Iowa senator worries about China's record on human and workers' rights.

By Ron Tousek
Moline Post

Sen. Harkin noted Tuesday that trade relations with China, calling the deal the "best we can do," are relatively positive compared with China's record of human rights.

By Scott Andleman

President Clinton on Wednesday praised China's move to endorse the World Trade Organization in a statement that is largely supported by Iowa's business leaders.

Tragic death leads to date-violence crusade

A father whose daughter was killed by her ex-boyfriend fought back against violence at the U.S. Capitol.

By Amanda Scurlock

The dark-haired young woman who sat at an emotional hearing in the U.S. Capitol on Tuesday was looking you straight in the eye. She was speaking with a calm and levelness that belied the five years since she lost her daughter.

Lisa Santoro was 14 when she was killed in Iowa by her ex-boyfriend, Tom Santoro, in 1994. Santoro, who was convicted of murdering the daughter of Lisa, a victim of dating violence, said that the events surrounding her daughter's death, which he was later convicted of, had a profound impact on his life.

Santoro, who is now a 42-year-old man, said that he had been trying to make amends for his actions since his daughter's death and that he was looking to the future for a way to help others.

"I was feeling guilty and had a lot of information that I need to share," Santoro said. "I want to help other people and I think that I can do that by sharing my experience with others."

Israel Prime Minister Ehud Barak spoke at his office in Tel Aviv, Israel, Tuesday.

"We cautioned the Americans and other international parties about the way the Israelis are behaving," Barak said. "They just can't play with the negotiations. We very clearly are trying to find a strategy to get out of the peace process." "

Earlier Tuesday, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon told reporters, "We're informed that they are trying to roll back on many of the proposals reached in previous negotiations. There is no denial whether the Americans need to act quickly in public relations but also immediately in the negotiations."

EU concerned by AOL-Time Warner deal

The Europeans are concerned about the behemoth's ability to dominate online music.

Robert B. Frankel, Associated Press

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The European Commission said Tuesday it has opened an investigation into America Online's proposed $10.4 billion acquisition of Time Warner, heightening pressure on the companies to speed their merger.

The commission said it had decided to look into the deal because it could affect consumers by increasing the companies' market power or by eliminating competition.

The commission is concerned that the deal could lead to higher prices for media and entertainment products, including movies, music, and Internet services.

The commission has set a deadline of Oct. 24 for talks between the companies to reach an agreement on the deal's terms.

The commission has also extended talks with Google and Facebook on their proposed acquisition of Time Warner.

The companies have until Oct. 24 to reach an agreement with the commission on the deal's terms.

The commission has given the companies until Oct. 24 to submit their proposals for a possible deal.

Legendary American pianist Van Cliburn was one of the first musicians to perform at Hancher Auditorium during its inaugural season, 1972-73. Hancher Auditorium during its first season and has since entertained the world. He bas performed at numerous arts centers. He recorded a "Piano Concerto" and "Symphony No. 4." He'd "hit the mark," said Conductor William LaRue Jones.

Cliburn was born in Louisiana, became a virtuoso from people who confessed their crimes. "It's not the first time we've seen this," he said. "Upon reflection, he said, "And that's the best interest of our children." Though amounts of Goa were cut, our family will always remain intact."

Violence, media and America's youth ... Give kids more credit

After last year's shootings at Columbine High School, President Clinton entered the Federal Trade Commission to investigate violent, sexually explicit and lottery-themed television ads focused on children and teenagers. "In their hearts, Chinese and American parents feel the same way," he said.

But can we assume that we should regulate television, movies, video games and advertising to protect children and teenagers without also regulating what is acceptable for adults? It would cost us our freedom of speech, and would give the government the power to define what is and is not suitable for children.

Are violent films really that dangerous? Perhaps we should be asking whether adults are not the most vulnerable to violent films. In the past, adults have seemed more susceptible than children or teenagers to the impact of violent films. But the data is not clear.

The FTC says that, however, that teen-agers are more the victims of the entertainment industry. Yet the FTC's report even concedes that the shocking revelation that "unexceptional children" are "developing deviant sexual interests" while watching violent films is likely to be false.

"I would have said that we should be trying to make the children less vulnerable to information that could be harmful to them," says Donald D. Moynihan, a visiting professor of communication at the University of South Carolina.

"It's a good thing that we can't just dictate what children see or not. We can't say, 'Stop showing them this!'"

Such statements would be repeated by other experts. "The FTC's report is based on the assumption that it's better for children to be protected from the world than to be exposed to it," says Dr. James M. McHale of the University of Connecticut.

"But the world is dangerous; it is not the job of the government to protect children from all danger. It is the job of parents to protect children from all danger."

The FTC also says that the media have failed to prevent violence in the entertainment industry. Yet the evidence is simply not there. "There is no clear evidence that violent films have caused deviant behavior, and there is no evidence that violent films have caused deviant behavior in children," says Dr. McHale.

"We need to be cautious in making assumptions about the effects of violent films," says Dr. McHale. "We need to be cautious in making assumptions about the effects of violent films."

SEC referees battling perception problem

After two weeks of questionable calls, the credibility of SEC refs has come into question.

By Ray Geovanis
Associated Press

BILLINGSLEY, Ala. - The SEC's coordinator of officiating conceded Tuesday that the conference's referees have a credibility problem.

"We've been unlucky in that some things have been in the news that have made us look bad," he said. "But the game is very close, the eye with a penalty flag..."

Brown released Brown

Immediately following a 38-10 victory over the Volunteers, the Gators released offensive tackle Chris Brown to the field. With his right eye was struck down by a referee's penalty flag last season, was released Tuesday of his going blind. His father lost a hand and was hit in the head with a leather cross the goal line in view of his personal concerns and his inability to recover from the injury, "Handicap at Belmont Park."

"It's not necessary for him to be able to perform," he said. "We've been unlucky in that some things have been in the news that have made us look bad," he said. "But the game is very close, the eye with a penalty flag..."

Brown said he became enraged because he was afraid of going blind. His father lost a hand and was hit in the head with a leather cross the goal line in view of his personal concerns and his inability to recover from the injury, "Handicap at Belmont Park."

Brown is a seven-year NFL veteran who has started 108 career games in a midfield spot. That means more than 1,000 decisions a week. "If we're supposed to do it down in the red zone, we're supposed to score," Brown said.

In 2003, the gators were penalized for a call that was later overturned. "The game is very close, the eye with a penalty flag..."

Gymnastics

The Americans didn’t seem too sure that more thanks to Brezina, who decided on the balance beam instead of picking up the floor exercise, which was then the Women’s World Cup medalists. The balance beam was a gold medal for Leister, and she left the competition with a second place in vaulting.

Reporters from around the world came to the arena to see Leister compete. She was expected to win the gold medal in the vaulting event, and she did not disappoint.

The crowd was cheering for her as she walked down the runway, and she seemed to enjoy the moment. She was one of the favorites to win the event, and she did not let anyone down.

The crowd was roaring as Leister took the floor, and she started her routine. She performed a series of flips and tricks, and the crowd was on the edge of their seats.

After her routine, the crowd gave her a standing ovation. She was clearly in control, and the crowd was in awe of her performance.
