COUNTY, CITY MULL GUN BANS

The county Board of Supervisors will vote on a firearms ban next week.

By KATIE HEINE

Johnson County officials are set to vote on a resolution that would ban guns from county property most week, and the Iowa City Council is seeing similar regulations.

Nearly 20 Johnson County residents attended a Board of Supervisors meeting Thursday to speak about the proposed resolution, which prohibits firearms on county-owned buildings, parks, and recreation areas. A vote is scheduled for Feb. 17.

Iowa City councilors are set to discuss regulation barring guns from city property and city buses at a Feb. 14 work session, with a vote on the proposal planned for Feb. 28.

Both are examples of government response to a change in Iowa law that makes it easier to obtain a gun permit. The new legislation, which allows county sheriffs to issue concealed-carry permits, took effect Jan. 1.

The Iowa City Public Library already banned firearms, and the Iowa City School District recently passed a ban prohibiting them at the district office.

“Our employees are prohibited from having weapons, and I have no problem prohibiting citizens from having weapons on our premises,” said Stephanie Fritchie, UI Student Government official.

“We have the right to control our own premises,” said Scott Pankratz, who attended Thursday’s meeting, and he takes pride in protecting his family’s safety and would feel discriminated against if his ability to bear arms was in question.

Richard Falk discussed the rise of 'soft power' in the post-World War II political environment.

By HINA EAMEN

Richard Falk looked into the heavy military counterattacks on Iran after the 1979 terrorist attack to the revolutionary fervor ancering the Middle East today in a lecture. Falk, a retired Princeton University law professor and UN Special Representative for Investigative Mission in the Palestinian Territories, was the speaker for the Peace-International-Campaign Against War's (PICAW) World Social Forum, a world militant union assembly.

Through the event was canceled for security reasons, a large group had asked to see the presentation because of Falk’s statements about 9/11. He addressed the issue just prior to the event, sometimesNOTE: THE TEXT CONTAINS A MENTION OF 9/11, BUT THE CONTEXT OF THE STATEMENT IS NOT CLEAR. IT COULD BE REFERENCING THE 9/11 TERRORIST ATTACKS OR ANOTHER ISSUE. NO ADDITIONAL INFORMATION IS AVAILABLE TO CONFIRM THE MEANING.

Iowa City Mayor Matt Rocklin said it has been a learning experience for Student Services and intended to address alcohol-related issues in Iowa City — in a closed session on Thursday morning — under four areas of focus: promoting policy and legislation, addressing issues in neighborhoods, diversifying downtown, and broadening the group’s membership. Officials briefed the media afterward.

Iowa City Councilor Ben Polednak said the partnership’s newly established mission statement should remain neutral on the 21-ordinance, which the group remains neutral on. He said the city has a difficult time balancing law enforcement with the liberty to carry arms very seriously and that the group is focused on eliminating barriers to not implement any ordinance until the city can never carry a gun, if any. He said the group isn’t anti-gun — but there are people who can’t think about it.

Linger ing worries over past Bijou censorship

This Valentine's weekend, University of Iowa students who wanted to watch the movie Disco Dolls in celebration of the holiday may have been disappointed. The Bijou, UI's campus cinema, decided to pull the film and replace it with Frequent Moviegoer, a documentary focusing on UI's history and recent rise in popularity.

Bijou employees explained their decision to the students: "We want to take a stand on an issue of safety, and that's why we opted for Frequent Moviegoer." The decision was made following a study conducted by the Traffic Safety Coalition, which found that the Bijou's decision to show Frequent Moviegoer was based on the film's potential to cause distraction among viewers.

Bijou's decision to pull the film has not been without its criticism. Some UI students have expressed their disappointment with the decision, while others have praised the Bijou for making a responsible decision in the name of safety.

The decision made by the Bijou is not unique to UI, as other universities across the country have also faced similar situations. For example, the University of California at Berkeley pulled the film The Interview from its campus cinema due to concerns about the film's potential to cause violence and unrest.

While the Bijou's decision may have been motivated by a concern for safety, it is also a reminder of the challenges that come with running a campus cinema. As with any organization, the Bijou must balance the need to provide a space for community engagement with the need to ensure the safety of its patrons.

Given the controversy surrounding the Bijou's decision, it will be interesting to see how other campus cinemas handle similar situations in the future. It remains to be seen whether the Bijou's decision will lead to a greater understanding of the importance of balancing safety and free speech.

UK students take action on higher education

This week, UK students have taken to the streets to protest against the government's proposed changes to higher education. The protests, which have been organized by the National Union of Students (NUS), have aimed to draw attention to the cuts to funding and to the proposed changes to tuition fees and student loans.

The NUS has been critical of the government's plans, which it claims will make higher education less accessible to students from lower socio-economic backgrounds. The NUS has also criticized the government's decision to increase tuition fees by 9%, which it claims will make it more difficult for students to afford to attend university.

The students have been calling for the government to reverse its plans and to provide more support for higher education. They have also been demanding that the government provide more funding for universities, which they claim will help to ensure that higher education remains accessible to all students.

The protests have been met with some resistance from the police, who have been trying to prevent the protests from escalating into violence. However, the students have remained undeterred, and the protests continue to draw large crowds.

Despite the challenges that the students face, they have been able to make their voices heard and to draw attention to the issues they care about. Their actions serve as a reminder of the importance of student activism and of the role that students can play in shaping the future of higher education.

Regent schools to share classes

The courses will be traditional online classes or a two-way video feed.

By ARYANA MITT

The Daily Iowan

Officials at the three state Board of Regents investigation plan to share at least 10 classes and courses that are offered at the other schools either through traditional online classes or two-way video feed. The plan only encompasses existing classes, but officials said further consolidating programs could be a way to cut costs.

The project is part of the regents’ Inter-Institutional Cooperation Task Force, formed in 2009. The regents used the task force as a means to consolidate resources and collaborate among the universities in an attempt to grow distri- buted education.

“We need to think about what will benefit the institu- tions and the students in ways that are cost effective for all students,” said Chet Rzonca, the dean of the UI Division of Continuing Education. Students who enroll in distance courses pay no additional fees beyond the standard costs of online courses at their enrolled university, and University of Northern Iowa president Bruce Rastetter and University of Iowa President Bruce Riemer said recently that the UI Division of Continuing Education could be a way to cut costs.

Many of the shared classes are taught at the other university, which for Rzonca could be a way to cut costs. “We will likely resemble more traditional online classes rather than feature interactive technologies,” said David Holger, the associate provost for academic online classes rather than feature such interactive technologies. “Having a student else see what is being done in this class or a two-way video feed will make the student feel that they are part of the class.”

The plan only encompasses existing classes, but officials said further consolidating programs could be a way to cut costs.

She was elated in a talent agency at the age of 3 because their parents have long been involved in theater. “To know that I was in something like that at such a young age is really amazing,” Hinkler said. “The only challenge is that where is no problem at all,” he said. “It was really easy to have that experience and for me to know that I was in a movie with Halle Berry.”

After her first big film, acting was put on hold. That is until Hinkler was in Clarke’s production, working in a high-school production all My Sons, which starred Halle Berry.

Roughly 25,000 University of Iowa students choose to live off-campus — and many sign leases without knowing their rights or options as tenants.

In attempt to educate students about the responsibilities and potential problems that come along with living in an apartment or house, the UI Off-Campus Housing Services and the City of Iowa City hosted the Off-Campus Housing Fair on Thursday.

“It’s really important for first-time tenants to realize they’re signing legal contracts so they understand their rights and responsibilities,” said Penny Kaelber, the manager of Off-Campus Housing Services. For the first time in the fair’s three-year history, local property managers and apartment owners attended the event, giving students a chance to discuss their specific housing options.

But an hour into the gathering, only 20 students who live off campus had taken advantage of the resources. Kaelber said students often don’t entirely know what their lease entails when they sign it, which leads to potential problems.

For example, on Dec. 22, an ex-tenant of Apartments Downtown filed a lawsuit against the property-management company — which owns much of the student-heavy housing near downtown — claiming the company takes advantage of students unaware of their rights. Since the original petition was filed, several more have joined the lawsuit, including UI students.

Amanda Scott, leasing agent for Apartments Downtown at the fair on Thursday, refused to directly comment on the lawsuit but said the company is open for discussion.

“We would love for people to talk directly to us to understand two sides to the story,” she said at the fair.

Sophomore transfer student Michael Maienza said he was slightly hesitant to sign with the company after hearing about the lawsuit.

“If Apartments Downtown gave me a logical explanation for what happened, then I would still use them,” Maienza said. “But if I didn’t like the explanation it gave me, then no way.”

Greg Bal, the supervising attorney for Student Legal Services who attended the event, said he is hopeful students will take the Apartments Downtown lawsuit as a learning experience and know they can seek free legal advice from his office.

“People should also be informed about potential citations,” he said.

Since Aug. 1, Iowa City Housing and Inspection Services has received more than 230 complaints related to disorderly house and disorderly conduct in off-campus housing.

Said Laverman:

“With the proper education, tenants can have fun while being responsible, he said.

“This is a great way to get all these resources in the same room,” he said. “It gives people who are working the booths the chance to network with each other.”

Numerous groups attended the event:
• Office of Neighborhood Services
• Iowa City Human Rights Commission
• UI International Services
• UI Nutrition Education Program
• Iowa City Landfill and Recycling Center
• Lodge Apartments

Baseball rich in pitching

After finishing third in the Big Ten last year, the Iowa baseball team has high hopes for 2011 with 21 lettermen returning.

The Iowa baseball team is off to a good start and the most experienced rotation in the Big Ten.

The southpaw has earned some accolades, being named as a Big Ten Pitcher of the Year.

Luke Lohse struggled to finish his takenover attempts for much of the season, but he could be successful in 2011, which he has more time off to do his arm.

The Hawkeyes looked sluggish from the tip and were out-rebounded 38-31.

load, and you feel like you have a lot of support, as opposed to hav- ing an empty gym.

He believes competing in con- junction with the women's team has grown a boost in attendance. Sophomore Matt McGrath said the energy in the building is a dis- tinct advantage for the Hawkeyes. "We try to build on the knowledge of the whole atmosphere, as the leader in the gym, we can help up and get up," he said. "When we fall, we're more likely to make a comeback."

Tonight's meet is the first competi- tion for Iowa in 13 days. Jiang and McGrath were scheduled to compete in the Winter Cup in Las Vegas on Feb. 5, but the winter storm that swept through the Midwest last weekend put the kibosh on their depar- ture. However, they got the opportunity to compete at a familiar setting.

"It adds a comfort level, to have people that they know there, as opposed to having an empty gym," Jiang said. "That's why home meets are no strangers to each other. This is the second encounter between the two squads this sea- son; the first came in the Windy City Invitational on Jan. 15. Although the Hawkeyes placed third and Iowa finished fifth, Minnesota has a higher team score on every event except for the high bar, an event where the Hawkeyes are more competitive.

In the national rankings, the Hawkeyes hold an edge in both the parallel bars and the high bar. Both bars are considered to be a favorite of the season.

"Our guys love it," the coach said. "It really gets the energy going, the whole atmosphere, so the louder it gets, the more pumped up we get," Reive said. "That's why home meets give a boost to attendance."

Hawks need better glass work

Rebounding will be difficult for Iowa against Trevor Mbakwe and the Golden Gophers.

BY SAM LOUVINAGE

Iowa's only senior Jared Cole showed the team's deviating overtime loss on Wednesday to No. 13 Wisconsin so simply as he could.

"Actually, he may have summed up basketball in 11 words," said Cole's 5-9 father. "The aggressor always gets the ball first and the rebounder is almost always the player who is fatherly concerned about his own glass."

As Cole starts his final six regular-season games, he seeks to prove his City College native's skill — rebounding — that must be taught to the rest of the seven now-departing Hawkeyes.

"It's usually a lost cause because you're usually losing games. Perhaps it was defense and untimely shooting, or maybe a turnover and fast-break points."

For Iowa, the Wisconsin IOWA 64, MINNESOTA 62

The Hawkeyes get back on track with a win on a last-second lay-up.
