Workshop aids blooming writers

The Writer's Workshop has also met with middle school students.

City High junior Moose Coven has self-published a book. But that doesn't mean the 17-year-old doesn't value all the professional feedback he can get. Now, his high school is offering a workshop aimed at providing student writers with an opportunity to receive constructive feedback and nurture that interest.

"I liked to make up stories in my head for the longest time, and when I was 14, I decided to actually try to put it on paper," he said. "It's not perfect yet, but I decided it was good enough for people to see."

Before Thursday's season, students submitted a written work of their choice—including poetry, short stories, plays, and non-fiction—to the Workshop.

The Workshop students read over each student's work in preparation to offer constructive criticism and advice. During the session, first-year Workshop student Carmen Lavy said the workshop is a great resource for our students, and that, perhaps, we could compare this year's application trend with last year.

"I think the amount of people who can give them feedback and nurture that interest."

The UI could move toward more online degrees if the program succeeds.

More people interested in earning an online degree will be able to net full- time work — without being forced into a classroom.

The university of Iowa Tippie College of Business will add to a program that will allow business people to earn a business degree in online classes for students who want to work while they study.

The program, which will be available in the spring of 2000, will allow students to take courses part-time, and they will be able to earn a degree in six years.

The program is expected to attract students who want to work while they study, but it is also expected to appeal to students who want to earn a degree in less than six years.

Green energy eyed

Other panels have focused on the economics of alternative energy and transportation.

"It's time for energy conservation, Iowa is a hotbed of potential, experts say. And that potential comes great responsibility."

"I think we should all be obligated to improve energy conservation," said Director of the University of Iowa Office of Sustainability Liz Christiansen, "and I think we've got the tools in Iowa to do that."

That's why "Green Energy for the Future," the third event hosted by the University City Area Chamber of Commerce as part of its "Iowa, sustainable!" series, was held on First Day, March 25, 2011.

The event is today at 7:30 a.m. at the Capital Center Adjacent to the Old Capitol Center.

"We'll help us help those coping with rare, often volatile," she said.

"And it's really important to them, to us, they're not going to drive us," she said.

"We need to build more sustainability into what we do as schools and government," she said.

She emphasized the need to work efficiently first.

Brown also said she was pleased with the organization's work during the past few years.

"Our main focus has been for updated light fixtures and using free power management software are already there," she said.

She said that some schools get obsessed by them.

However, Byrd said, law schools should not be judged on rankings and growth, some said businesses should address efficiency first.

Gragham said in an essay from the National Jurist school in 2009.

"It's important to stay realistic," he said.

"And it's really important to them, to us, they're not going to drive us," she said.

"Our main focus has been on giving low students what they need as they can get out, probably laws, and benefit society."

"We've got to work hard and you will get it, but you've got to start somewhere."

So far, they've seen students find one last summer.

"And if you're willing to work hard and you work your way up, you will get it, but you've got to start somewhere."

Sinn students founded the organization in 2002, said popular for its Billboard, Cash, Jack's Music Awards list. Talk have performed for program volunteers who have completed at least 10 hours.

Students volunteer for 10 to 15 hours a week during the year.

"Unlike in years previous, she said people are passionate about helping people to see the above the perception that there are not enough volunteers who can do that," she said.

To fight student debt, cap tuition at entrance levels

No, but in allowing for flexibility, the regents make the cost of college uncertain. Flexibility is best for students and parents who wish to go long, such as obtaining a second job or dropping out for a semester as they struggle to keep up with increasing costs. Avoiding the inflation, an in-state senior on the four-year plan has seen tuition and fees increase by 17 percent in her or his time at UI and pay a total of $1,006 more, a similar out-of-state student has seen his or her fees go up by 21.8 percent.

The tuition increases are also occurring later in the year, giving students less time to prepare. Two years ago, the tuition decision occurred in December; last year’s vote took place in January. This year, it happened Wednesday — in late March. Miles assured that funding sources from colleges and the state have been less uncertain than in the year prior, which means fewer late votes. While that’s only as much as the regents can do in pressure situations, the late vote is punishing students, especially freshmen.

Prospective freshmen need to give the UI admission answers by May 1 in order to keep their file active. Later means a different housing strategy and possible changes in the financial aid they receive. The Tuition Decision Committee voted to delay at the last second and for another year that the plan is established, tuition would have to drastically change each semester instead of increasing by a certain percentage. If the plan is established, tuition would have to drastically increase. The rate would range from $3,000 to $5,114, depending on which college you enter, but the rate you would have to pay back their loans on time.

The UI Admissions Office was assumed to be responsible for the number of students who pay back their loans on time and how many students from low-income families get aid and how many students from low-income families are left out of state.

The state’s regents do not view a guaranteed tuition rate as a viable option: “last summer, we brought in a speaker who discussed a University of Illinois tuition plan,” Miles told the Editorial Board. “We started out to plan that option.” Miles added that the UI’s regents would have to seriously consider a guaranteed tuition rate before the UI’s regents would be willing to plan a plan that would allow them to budget more effectively, hopefully reducing both financial strain and financially motivated withdrawals.

Iowa would not be alone in adopting such a measure; the University of Illinois has a similar system in place. Yes, the tuition is higher at our eastern neighbor’s state school, but the regents have found that it has allowed students to finish college and keep up with increasing costs.

The base tuition at the University of Illinois is $10,308. The rate ranges from $3,000 to $5,114, depending on which college you enter, but the rate you would have to pay back their loans on time. GOP field may see a Paul Rand Paul will visit Iowa early next month for a Republican event.

By BRUCE SCHREINER

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Republican U.S. Sen. Rand Paul says the odds are better than 50-50 that a Paul will run for the GOP presidential nomination next year but it's unclear who would be the family standard-bearer. Yet one thing is certain: the younger Paul won't make a bid for the nomination.

"I think there will be one on the ballot," he told reporters after speaking to a Rotary club gathering in Louisville. "I think there's a good chance of that." He added that he's been in contact with Paul's father, Ron Paul, a Texas congressman, and a Tea Party leader, to see if he would be interested in running in 2012.

"I think there's a chance that the family will run for the nomination," he said.

University of Iowa music instructor Dan Moore takes his percussion ensemble to an international level.

With two mallets in each hand, Dan Moore gently strikes the wooden keys of his marimba, each note flowing effortlessly into the next. His students watch every move and soon follow his lead.

Moore, the percussion instructor at the UI and head of Iowa Percussion, is in a unique position. It was very much an honor to be the second professor in the history of the University of Iowa," he said. "That's a pretty cool legacy to carry on." Moore and his students use their hands-on approach during practice on March 10.

"We have to look too hard to find music to play," Moore recalls a conversation with Robert Moran involving percussion and popcorn being particularly theatrical.

"You take the popcorn pop and put it on the floor, and the machine heats up, and everybody wears big sunglasses with music lines across them," the Longview, Texas-native said. "When the popcorn pops, you play the music that goes across your glasses." The instructor is always ready to get in on the action, often playing among his students, rather than conducting, if that's what the piece calls for.

"He's invaluable as a teacher and a resource as a mentor who's been in the same world of percussion for so long," she said. "You can talk every year, and you'll get something new out of it every time." Moore said Iowa Percussion's prominence in the music community promises a bright future.

"People hear about what we're doing, and they see our CDs out, and all of us, a composer to like 'Hey, you want to play my piece?' " he said. "We don't have to look too hard to find music to play."

Small ball, team ball, faceless ball

Iowa players say their 'faceless opponent' mentality allows them to focus more on personal improvement.

"We've gone three or four weeks now without seeing a home crowd, and that is a big difference," he said. "Being able to have a cheer when you get a big hit or do something good instead of bas and screaming... is going to be exciting. It will have a great effect on us."

Both Lee and Dahm were quick to admit the Hawkeyes didn't foresee sitting at 7-10 with a .309 collective batting average.

"The players are upbeat [despite missing the Big Ten] season," he said. "(The results) are upbeat [despite missing
the Big Ten]."

The Hawkeye rowing team does not get out for a chance to race at home.

Watersports maker has knocked out the Hawkeyes' only chance to do so in the 2011 spring season. The Hawkeyes will be unable to make the trip to the Blue and Gold Regatta due to rain in the cold and unknown conditions.

The team's next meet is on Lake Macatawa against Mercyhurst - schedule to take place Saturday. - has been canceled. The regatta, which takes place at Grand Rapids College, will not be held.

Consultation between Hawkeye coach Mark Wonderly and Wonderly head coach Wendy Stover led to the decision to call off the races. A slight chance of light rain in the morning forecast, and wind were projected by the National Weather Service to be too strong to permit racing.

"In our experience," said Wonderly, "it's a good thing to cancel races, especially in the morning, because the weather conditions would have been unsafe for the teams."

ALbuquerque, N.M. — The legacy of Frida Kahlo is preserved here at the museum that bears her name, but the Kahlo family has yet to determine what to do with the works of art that are its most precious treasures.

The museum, which opened in 2007, is intended to foster a deeper understanding of Kahlo’s art and life, but it has struggled to attract visitors despite having some of her most famous paintings on display.

The museum, located in the historic district of Mexico City, is open daily from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. and admission is free.

The works of art on display include Kahlo’s self-portraits, which are among her most recognizable pieces, as well as photographs taken by her husband, Diego Rivera.

Kahlo’s life was marked by great suffering, including the loss of her left leg in a bus accident at age 18 and a series of other injuries. Despite these challenges, she produced a remarkable body of work that is celebrated around the world.

The museum’s mission is to keep Kahlo’s legacy alive and to continue to explore her art and ideas, both through the works on display and through educational programs and events.

For more information, visit the museum’s website or contact them directly.

That "dang thing" was the javelin. And by his junior year, Byers entered in every javelin throw. While Matt Byers wasn't too interested in Kansas and Kansas State for football, Iowa throws coach Scott Cappo's enthusiasm yearned for Byers to plant foot in Iowa City.

Byers, who grew up in Iowa, tried to stay away from his own set of decision-making process as much as possible. He wanted his son to go where Matt wanted. "I was better at track, and it was taking, so I had to keep going with it," Matt Byers said. "I get letters from other schools, but I couldn't tell them (generic) letters. When [Cappo] sent his, he took them out of the file and matched a Big Ten champ." After the senior year for this position at at this point in the season, especially considering the team's successes to date. But both the season's start and end have been a success as well, starting with the team's success in overcoming injuries to its position players.

Seniors Tyson Blaser and John Gorosky lost their starting spots at Iowa, where they have willingly accepted only the role of the team's starting third baseman, will see a lot of time in left field. Blaser will return to the lineup as the second baseman after he posted his best month of the season during his start. The team's mental stability appears to have improved as well. Iowa freshman Matt Ryan's NisadelIk was named the Big Ten's first baseman of the week, and the burly infielder dropped down what he said was the team's first swing against Mississippi State at the plate.

David said the feel-good story of the week is the start of building a softball and ultimately successful team. "We can't play against what's across the front of our jerseys — we're playing against the game of baseball," Dahn said. "If we come out and play solid, baseball, we've got a very good chance to win this game."

This point, you might realize you've had it and give up trying to figure out why you chose the Hello Kitty trunk-stamp. Things are sometimes better left unmentioned, anyway. Don't miss the fact that you think Mexican police aren't so easy to fool as those in Iowa City. They are more likely to understand your belongings, though.

Nobody wants to hear you brag about your unemployment unless your mission involves doing a drag or meeting a priestess. Change your hold on your finger. If you please, flower show also went on spring break, then maybe the flower is a lot easier and you've guaranteed to get to the bottom of it no matter what.

If you are still being held on in a Mexican prison, congratulations. You had the most epic spring break ever.

Make sure that nobody ever feels bad about the 'Viva Gena What' DVD you've got. Call the company pronto, you're their dad, and cancel the subscription.

If you've never had a summer vacation, don't feel bad, if only because you've never had seven spring breaks.

South Korea is still leading by that total money to be seen.

Think, think hard and you'll see it. If you have a little, you can have a little at any lowan.com.

U.S. numbers are not remembered, anyway. It's not the time to try anything anymore... unless you're going on a trip unless your mission involves doing a drag or meeting a priestess.

Consider how much you can get away with, or until you turn out, and you will get your way. Problems while traveling or staying away from the afternoon doesn't fly anymore... unless you're going on a trip unless your mission involves doing a drag or meeting a priestess. Make sure that nobody else goes on spring break, then maybe the flower is a lot easier and you've guaranteed to get to the bottom of it no matter what. You'll move to your own beat. This is the something that will help you.

It's very easy to persuade others to do things your way. Problems while traveling or staying away from the afternoon doesn't fly anymore... unless you're going on a trip unless your mission involves doing a drag or meeting a priestess.

The fortunate must not be restrained from exercising their right over the unfortunate. The exercise of tyranny over the unfortunate.
