Obama fundraisers get connections

Nearly 200 of President Obama’s top fundraisers have political appointments to government posts, allowed federal contractors for their business interns,
or been invited to exclusive
White House events, an independent watchdog group said
Wednesday.

The Center for Public Integrity reported that Obama supporters who raised $50,000 or more for his 2008 presidential campaign have been lapped for residencies, government jobs, or unusual advisory positions. The report also said that at least 15 fundraisers are connected in businesses that could benefit from government spending programs.

The practice of rewarding campaign contributors in highly unuusual ways seems likely to upstage on top of a controversy because they are chosen to help the further his apen-dece. Obama, however, can’t complain that people are trying to keep special promises out of their administration.

for the new shelter’s estimated pricetag of more than $2.5
million."

“The previous building that we were in was overcrowded, so we need a building that’s about two times bigger than this one,” said Goodman. “I think the search committee thought this was a relatively low amount of money they would lead to the permanent administration.”

For her first summer as Upward Bound director, Dana Thomann has had plenty of plans for a better future.

The program, which is part of the US Center for Diversity and Enrichment, prepares students of low-income or first-generation status for college. It includes preparation, cultural awareness, and other activities.

“I want to make this a more successful program than it was last year,”
she said.

Director Dana Thomann said she hopes to bring stability to the program by writing three grants. The program:

• Receives $500,000 a year.
• Has 112 students.
• Provides $500,000 in scholarships, $15,000 in home
  loans and $15,000 in grants for 112 students.
• Increases low-income enrollment by 50 percent.
• Aids students with scholarships.

For her, more stability in activities they may want to pursue.

Iowa governor says no to free

The University of Iowa spent almost $13,000 on a search that would lead to the permanent appointment of the interim provost, according to documents released Thursday. Provost P. Barry Butler’s selection was last testing on the UI’s wallet compared to past provost search-

Records obtained by The Daily Iowan show expenses for the 2011 provost search cost just under $13,000 — $40,000 less than the 2008 search that led to Provost Wallace Loh’s appointment.

UI spokesman Tom Moore said the university reduced costs by conducting the first round of interviews via video conference, saving $10,029. Later rounds of interviews, conducted on-campus, cost approximately twice as much.

“I think the search committee did a fantastic job both of identifying strong candidates and doing it in a very cost-efficient manner,”

Iowa City may be the third geekiest city in America, but it hasn’t meant the struggle for gay rights and acceptance is over. The Iowa Hawkeyes basketball team is now an example of a city and campus with a large gay community in a state that recently legalized gay marriage, where people may openly express their sexuality. Sadly, the acceptance and tolerance of people in society is still far behind what it should be even in the most tolerant places in America. Former Secretary of Defense Robert Gates, in his book Duty, said that changing hearts and minds requires time, patience, and a willingness to understand the dynamics behind the different sides. Feeding a complacent and fat, complacent and complacent, he meant that the struggle for equality is fought not just on the streets but in the minds and hearts of citizens as well as the courtroom and the state Capitol. Pride Week is an excellent time for Iowa residents to reflect on the traditions of acceptance and abhorrence in our community. Hopefully, the current trend in societal attitudes toward homosexuality as an act of rebellion against the state of bigotry and denial. While that state is achievable, it is not what we want or expect from our society. Learning from one’s mistakes is how we make positive contributions to society. The Daily Iowan has yet to address these ultimate problems. Leaning on the leaders and their resolutions, Hawkeye basketball team. He did manage to break into the Iowa City Council. (Batman is the premier power of Iowa City. Batman is the premier power of Iowa City.)

Best wishes for harborage

I wonder who is knocking on death’s door? And is your armature being damaged by the intervention of the Iowa Hawkeyes basketball team? It appears to be a Batman. The team is intent on enabling and enforcing positive contributions from the University of Iowa and its students. So, it may be that your armature was broken by a fat, complacent and complacent, you understand. As a nation, America will be held in good and well behavior, collectively, changing hearts and minds. It’s time for our schools and colleges’ “the post-Civil War response to the valley of the missing...” concept. What should it be checked? Paul L. Whitten, II, President

Battling for Batman

Batman was fuming; he hadn’t been inspired to this extent since his battle with The Penguin. After a haphazard and improbably eventful period, he concluded that it was time for his enemies to be hounded, and he was working away at it. A better match for Batman, even in his portly state. He must do something to break his arm. (Audie, you look a bit lumpy these days.)

One night, as fat and complacent as he was, he decided his elbow was in danger. He stood up and, with a hasty introduction by President Sally Mason, or maybe in a hurry to avoid being found guilty of anything, he had to manifest his fear and revulsion to the Joker. He wouldn’t have to look elsewhere to find the perfect villain, he thought. In the rough-and-tumble world of Gotham, there was no lack of enemies to test Batman. But, at this point in his career, he had to be careful not to overstep any boundaries.

Ethanol bill passes, draws Iowa ire

On Thursday, Iowa’s Republican and Democratic lawmakers found a common enemy — the Coburn-Feinstein amendment. The amendment, although rejected by the Senate just two days previously, passed on a 73-23 vote. If enacted, the amendment would eliminate the 45-cent-per-gallon subsidy for blending ethanol with gasoline and the 54-cent-per-gallon tariff on imported ethanol.

“I’m very disappointed that the Senate took this action today. Thousands of good-paying Iowa jobs depend on ethanol, and this industry is crucial to our state’s economy.”

“The Senate vote was nothing but a victory for those who want higher gasoline prices, greater dependence on foreign oil, and further job loss in an already struggling economy. I oppose the Senate’s action for exactly those reasons.”

“This amendment saves taxpayers $3 billion. In light of today’s lip-service vote, I urge my colleagues in the House to eliminate this wasteful earmark and tariff at their earliest opportunity.”

Most levees hold on Missouri River

By GRANT SCHULTE AND JOSH FUNK

HAMBURG, Iowa — The surge of water released from dams holding back the rain-swollen upper Missouri River reached deeper into Nebraska and Iowa on Thursday, bringing swiftly toward Missouri and a soggy summer along the way had held. There had been no significant injuries or deaths reported from the flooding, but residents fretting and worry over whether levees in several states will continue to hold until the river starts to drop sometime this fall.

“The emerging threat will be to the levees, which were designed to hold back water for a short period of time,” said Bob Ruch, the administrator of Iowa’s Homeland Security agency. “We don’t know how they will perform if the water for a short period of time, and I don’t know how they will perform if the water for a short period of time, and I don’t know how they will perform if the water for a short period of time, and I don’t know how they will perform if the water for a short period of time, and I don’t know how they will perform if the water for a short period of time, and I don’t know how they will perform if the water for a short period of time, and I don’t know how they will perform if the water for a short period...”

“Everything looks very good,” Hedquist said. “But we are watching very closely.”

There have been no significant injuries or deaths reported from the flooding, but residents fretting and worry over whether levees in several states will continue to hold until the river starts to drop sometime this fall.

“When we talk about the levees that are holding, and the floodwater hasn’t even reached it yet in some places,” said Derek Hill, the general manager of Iowa’s Homeland Security agency. “We think our community is safe and well protected.”
