Iowa State announces two presidential finalists

The Iowa State Presidential Search committee announced the two finalists in the presidential search, who will visit the campus next week for open forums and interact with faculty. (Leath) to participate in open forums from Sept. 22-24. Subbaswamy, the provost of the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, were left after two of the other candidates withdrew from the search for personal reasons. The two candidates will visit campus on Sept. 21-22 (Subbaswamy) and Sept. 22-24 (Leath) to participate in open forums and interact with faculty and students at ISU.

Neither candidates were available for comment: the Iowa State Board of Regents are expected to decide on a candidate next week according to the University of Iowa. — Iowa State Daily

CLARIFICATION

In the Sept. 15 article, “Official: Almost decrease in student ambulance calls misleading,” the DI was not specific in stating which ambulance statistics were reported during the meeting, the ambulance statistics reported at the Partnership for Alcohol Safety meeting included ambulance calls, not just student ambulance calls. The DI regrets the error.

WEST DES MOINES — The state Board of Regents will seek more than $267 million in appropriations from state legislators in the upcoming legislative session. But state politicians have mixed views about whether the 4 percent increase over last year’s funding is feasible.

“There are a lot of demands and a limited amount of money,” said Rep. Greg Forristall, R-Macedonia. “Four percent could be fairly minimal.”

At Tuesday’s meeting, Regent President Bruce Rastetter said the increase is a message to legislators and fellow regents that increasing state appropriations is no longer tolerable.

“I think what’s important is that we send a message to the people of Iowa that the decrease in appropriations has stabilized,” he said. Regent input on tuition costs should have more weight with legislators, he said.

Sen. Joe Bolkcom, D-Iowa City, said he believes appropriations are vital to the public-state universities.

“The state needs to do its part,” he said. “I think that a 4 percent increase is needed more than ever. I’ll be going back to work in January when the Legislature makes the case, that is such an important investment.”

Bolkcom said he thinks Iowa is doing its part, “We’ve always said that we work Iowa hard,” he said. “We still stand by what’s going on and what we’ve said.”

Currently, state appropriations make up only 20.7 percent of general-education funding for the regent’s schools, down from 19.3 percent during last fiscal year, according to the report. At the

UHIC updates

UHIC officials updated the status of critical projects at the state Board of Regents meeting on Tuesday, including the Adult Critical Care Bed Tower. The tower is scheduled to be completed in 2024.

Officials expect the total cost of the tower project to be $245 million. The tower will develop four new ambulatory surgical centers and support facilities on the south level of the Pomerantz Family Pavilion, with additional space to enhance the current operating rooms, according to the request.

Additionally, two more operating rooms will be developed in the main operating room area.

"We set high goals because we have to achieve them," said Jean Hammond, the UI vice president for Medical Affairs. "Each patient's length of stay, although it has remained fairly steady, is an ongoing concern with UHIC officials. We're trying to really drive down length of stay in every area we can," said Hammond.

The report also supplements a request for $295.9 million budget for the ''emergency department'' and main operating room expansion project.

The request also includes plans for a new $105 million medical office building.

In addition to UHIC projects, the UI is also asking for approval of a $10.2 million renovation of a student housing unit located in a central area of the campus.

Unlocking football's mysteries

The Football 101 event is the first event of its kind at the UI.

“If elected, I would look forward to the opportunity to best represent the student candidates, specifically international students, to come together and learn a little about why football is such a big part of American and UI culture,” Patel said. “I’d be honored to have my platform be part of the race — Patel and part of Payne.”

Though Payne admitted he doesn’t know much about UISG, he said he doesn’t see it as an important issue for students. “I don’t see it as an important issue for students, which is unfortunate for me.”

“This is a very, very close thing in terms of the entire spectrum of the candidates and 50/50,” Tippie Senate President Lucy Krol said. “The evening concluded with a brief presentation from Solow about the history of football as well as some rules and strategy to help students put a rough outline in their heads of how the game is played. He also spoke about why football has grown so large in the United States and what it means to the UI community. He said he hoped after this event students will gain a better appreciation of why people get so excited every weekend, and if they decide to attend a game at Kinnick Stadium, they will have a better understanding of what is taking place before, during, and after the game.”

Herky also wanted and took a seat front row to hear Solow’s last words of the evening: “It doesn’t feel good to sit around the table with Americans talking about football and not have any idea what they are talking about. I hope we do this event again.”

Council approves TIF district

The Iowa City City Council voted in favor of financing an urban-renewal project through tax-increment financing during a meeting Tuesday.

A TIF ordinance was proposed in order to provide such financing through new developments from the project.

With a 6-0 vote, the city adopted the Towncrest Urban Renewal project. Councilor Connie Champion abstained, citing a potential conflict of interest.

Adopting the TIF ordinance is the second step in setting up a tax-increment district.

Council OKs Pedestrian Mall ATM

The Iowa City City Council on Tuesday voted to approve a request to install a Wells Fargo bank ATM on the College Street area of the Pedestrian Mall.

The bank will renew a lease with the council that will allow it to place the ATM for an initial period of five years.

The bank may renew the lease up to four times after the initial five-year period.

According to Iowa Code Section 364.7, the City Council must hold a public hearing before any possible long-term lease agreements are passed.

The council approved the measure on a 7-0 vote.

Council backs changing N. Dodge speed limit

The Iowa City City Council voted in favor of considering an ordinance that would change the speed limit along North Dodge Street in the area of Prairie Du Chien Road and Conklin Lane.

The city engineer and the Iowa Department of Transportation recommended establishing a 35 mph speed limit between Prairie Du Chien Road and 175 feet north of Conklin Lane.

They would also consider establishing a 45 mph speed limit between a point 175 feet north of Conklin lane to a point 600 feet south of the northern city limits.

Evidence allowed in homicide trial

University of Iowa Regents met in a special session Tuesday.

Sixth District Judge Sean McFarland oversaw the defense motion to exclude a state’s witness, and the defense declined its request to have a piece of blood evidence sealed. Both pieces of evidence will be subjectified during the trial.

Further questioning was held in connection with the potential jurors Tuesday, and several were dismissed because they believed they could not handle the case or that their “personal circumstances” would prevent them from following court instructions.

Thompson was charged with first-degree murder in the slaying of Iowa City woman John Vosur. The trial intends to determine not only whether Thompson is guilty but whether the crime was “premeditated murder” or a “heinous murder.” The police believe the suspects could have acted after Sept. 12.

Juror selection will continue at the Johnson County Courthouse. Opening arguments are expected to begin before noon.

Couple charged in earnest bust

Coralville police have arrested the owners of a married couple facing drug charges in their residence.

Taisha Kiawana Poole, 27, and Charles William Curtis Thompson, 29, were charged Tuesday with possession of controlled substances, endangerment and charges related to the possession of five or more drug paraphernalia.

Poole and Thompson were accused of being present in their residence in the 900 block of Iowa Avenue on Sept. 14, 2012.

Poole and Thompson were arrested Sept. 12 after police searched Taisha Kiawana Poole, 27, and Jamerson admitted to selling heroin in the apartment freezer.

Police believe the suspects were involved in the death of Iowa City landlord John Vosur.

The couple was charged Tuesday with possession of heroin and drug paraphernalia.

The suspects are scheduled to appear in court soon.

The Iowa City City Council voted Tuesday to allow temporary outdoor Iowa City vendors to sell alcohol regardless of their proximity to residential areas.

Before the change, vendors without a permanent outdoor establishment could not sell alcohol within 100 feet of a residential area.

A year ago, the councilors voted to implement an ordinance that would allow permanent outdoor businesses to sell alcohol, regardless of proximity to residential areas. Now, the councilors said, they feel making the new change would allow them to stay consistent, said City Attorney Eleanor Dilkes.

"Essentially, this is just a cleanup item," she said.

There was no discussion or objection regarding the proposal, and councilors voted 7-0 in favor for the ordinance.

"This is just a consistency thing with existing practices," said Melissa Carr, a co-owner of George's Buffet, 312 E. Market St. "My husband and I own George's and think it would be a wonderful opportunity for people to enjoy the music and sit outside and sip their beverages."

The ordinance will only apply to the central area, so vendors on Melrose Avenue will not be included.

"That made absolutely no sense at all," said Jann Ream, the city code-enforcement assistant. In order to be consistent with this, officials enacted an ordinance to allow permanent outdoor service vendors to sell alcohol regardless of distance from a residential area.

"We'd like to think when we find things like that we work diligently to make sure our ordinances are consistent and they make sense," Ream said.

"This is just a consistency thing with existing practices," said Ross Wilburn, City Councilor. "And it definitely makes sense to be consistent."
Circling Roosevelt Elementary, Iowa City resident Bob Dostal said there was always something cute about “the little brick box” that is Roosevelt. But that property may soon be sold, sparking debate among the community and the Iowa City School Board.

Roosevelt Elementary will close at the end of this academic year; the School Board voted to close the school in 2009. The district is building another school, Borlaug Elementary, several miles away.

Community members of the Miller Orchard Neighborhood said they want to keep the elementary school standing and the green space open.

“The school is like a miniature paradise for learning,” 72-year-old community member Dolstal said. “I can’t let it go.”

He said he would like to see the building restored to its original architecture and remain an elementary school.

Mary Knudson, a member of the Miller Orchard Neighborhood Association, said she would like to keep the building as well as the surrounding property intact.

“I live right across from the green space and see soccer players, cricket players, and parents teaching kids how to play,” she said. “The green space is very family-oriented, there are so many elementary students, college students, and people who play. If you took pictures of it, you would have a glimpse into Iowa City.”

But School District Superintendent Stephen Murley said selling the property is “the only viable option.”

And if it comes down to selling the property, Knudson said, the community does not want to see high-rise apartment buildings, high-occupancy buildings, bars, liquor stores, or strip malls.

Murley said the school and administrative staff will take the input from the neighborhood and bring it before the School Board before making a final decision.

“The dialogue gives us a better understanding of what the neighborhood wants when we are talking to the city, state, and Realtors,” Murley said. “We want the city to know upfront what your sentiments are and take that into consideration as we look at the sale process. We want to make sure we are acting in good faith when we sell the property.”

Murley said the School District realizes selling the property would mean losing control of what is done with the property.

“We can’t tell the buyers what they can and can’t do with it,” Murley said. He said the process is the same as buying and selling a car.

“Once you sell a car, they can do whatever they want to do with it,” Murley said. Jeffrey McGinnes, a School Board member-elect, does not think repurposing the school is a viable option.

“We should take whatever option that has the ability to recapture the most money and put it back into the budget to hire more teachers,” he said.

However, Dostal said, the district will need the building space in the next few years because of an unending need for more elementary-school capacity in southwest Iowa City.

“Right now the growth rate is flat, but that is deceiving, because in a few years down the road, it’s going to spike,” he said.

By JORDAN GARRETON

Iowa’s offense was stagnant for most of its game against Pittsburgh on Sept. 17.

Then came the no- nuke, and the Hawkeyes scored touchdowns on their last two drives and won as James Vandenberg was 17-of-20 for 217 yards over the game’s final 22:17.

But despite that success, head coach Kirk Ferentz said fans shouldn’t necessarily expect Iowa to field the ball all over the field for the rest of the season.

Ferentz said Tuesday that Iowa’s short-statured — down 2-6-1 late in the third-quarter — forced his hand.

“I didn’t feel like we had enough of a chance,” he said. “Part of it, too, is it’s the opposite of what we’ve been doing earlier in the game. James had a couple reads he probably could have taken earlier in the game. James had a couple opportunities he probably could have gotten in on the receive side.

And even though the increased tempo facilitated single-game offense because in completions, yards, and passing touchdowns for Vandenberg, he said he knows Iowa’s offense isn’t departing from its perennially even approach.

“I don’t think we’re going to try to change anything for another anytime soon,” Vandenberg said with a laugh. “We’re going to have a good balance. We have to clean up some details to get that going a little better.”

the crowd, and Hickey has a chance to take photos with her friend who wants to meet him.

Peterson learns the names of Iowa's volleyball players so she can personally cheer for the Hawkeyes, making her more like just another loyal fan who happens to be on the court with the players.

"At the volleyball games, it's more about doing our job as cheerleader and getting into the action of the game, and being a member of the audience," Peterson said. "At the football games, it's more about an adrenaline rush and a performance, whereas at a volleyball game, we're really just out there to help support my school and the athletes. I really like that.

"With a smaller crowd at the volleyball game, the fans can appreciate the squad more. Obviously, volleyball games give the Spirit Squad an opportunity to feel as if its members are really like just another fan who happens to be on the court with the Hawkeyes, fans and Iowa athletes instead of just getting lost in the crowd."

"You do throw on the excitement of having 70,000 people behind you, but you feel as if its members are part of the team and help it out," Peterson said. "At the volleyball game, we're doing something really different, but we're also doing something really important to support the team and help it out."

The three keepers shout "goal" when Moran graduates, "We're trying to make it to the bye week and then some," Peterson said. "I don't know of neither of them are going to play this week, but they're both getting closer. It's been up and down with Nolan. I just hope they do it just that goalkeeping is a mental thing, and if you think about it too much, it will hurt you."
