Class uses Potter as window to learning

The UI will offer another Harry Potter-theme class in the fall.

By CHASTITY DILLARD

The end of the Harry Potter series signified the end of Cristina Ponce's childhood. The University of Iowa senior said she grew up "alongside" Harry Potter and often imagined their worlds coexisting with magical adventures filled with fire-breathing dragons, scary boggarts, flaming golden snitches, and tasty butterbeer.

"I must have read the first book 16 or 17 times, probably more," she said. "Each time I still laugh at the funny parts and cry at the sad parts!"

So when the UI Honors Program announced a new Harry Potter-centric literature class would be offered during the 2012 spring semester, she jumped at the chance.

UI officials said modern-themed course work featuring popular cultural sub-genres, such as the boy wizard, helps students resonate with important issues in the classroom.

"I am not fighting for the right to be beautiful, to do my hair in giant curls, wear much makeup and lose so much weight in order to feel valued in society," she wrote in an email.

"This objectification process, she added, still relates to issues of size discrimination. "I just wanted to have fun with my friend, and unfortunately, something as simple as that wasn't okay."
Ed bill to focus on literacy

Legislators said an education-reform bill that will likely address early childhood literacy issues.

By LOIS WARD, Staff Writer

Iowa legislators said the surviving portions of a proposal to overhaul state education reform will likely focus on early childhood literacy.

Sen. Harman Quirmbach, D-Cedar Rapids, with Education Convenors Council of Presidents Chairwoman Pearl Boyd Robertson, Charlestown, and Rep. Ruth Cramm, D-Cedar Rapids, this week will develop a formal version of a bill that would provide grants to train teachers on literacy skills.

If approved by the Iowa House and Senate, the bill would be introduced either today or Thursday to the end of the conference committee.

The legislation would be sponsored by Sen. Robert Dubs, D-Cedar Rapids, and Rep. Donald Young, R-Des Moines, would not qualify for $15 million-

Mason's husband paid to attend fundraising events

University of Iowa President James L. Mason, who is due to retire in 2016, will be paid $24,988 this year or five events that qualify as the "lifestyle," according to four accounts listed in The Daily Iowan.

The university’s bring-in two-page "Statement of Author," which gives him more than $48,000 in other accounts, in addition to his career at UI College of Medicine.

The accounts, which pay the university $104,600, include the amount of Mason’s salary, which is paid by the University of Iowa College of Medicine.

Dave Menefee, University of Iowa College of Medicine, said the accounts are necessary to ensure that Mason, who is a board member of the University of Iowa Health Care Foundation, is paid for his work.

Voters to blame for polarization

Americans don’t have all that much confidence in Congress anymore. According to a recent gallup poll, the number of voters who believe that Congress is an institution that actually represents their interests has dropped from 16 percent in 1977 to 4 percent today. This makes sense to those of us who have been involved in politics for some time. Four times, though as bad as Congress’s historical record has been, it was nothing compared to what we have seen in recent years. In fact, according to Gallup’s most recent poll, it is a record that has been, it has inspired less confidence in Congress as a broken institution. It is rather clear is that polarization has contributed much to this dysfunction. It is rather clear is why Congress is so polarized.

Voters should not be the only one to blame for polarization. Some blame the influence of money, and again I believe that discussion would actually add clarity to the Congress we “need” and the Congress we deserve. Another implication that another tempt-

WASHINGTON — A tentative deal to allow direct flights to Taiwan signed by President Chen Guanghong is the study in the United States. Washington aviation experts said that Chen’s agreement may signal a sustained effort by the Chinese leaders to relax the embargo on trade relations with the United States, which was only three years ago.

It is a testament to how two nations with a common goal and a shared history can work together without a large risk of compromise.

Several steps remain before Chen can take up direct flights to Taiwan, including negotiations over the number of flights, the number of passengers, and the number of airports.

Chen said that the deal is an important step in the process of normalizing relations with the United States. The deal is an important step in the process of normalizing relations with the United States. The deal is an important step in the process of normalizing relations with the United States.

Police turn to social media

Social Media

Police officials locally and throughout Iowa use social media for crime prevention and information.

Law-enforcement officials are using Facebook and Twitter to get in touch with residents, and they are also starting to catch criminals and see their information and its benefits in catching criminals.

The University of Iowa police uploaded six surveillance photos last week on their Facebook page of two males stealing a bike another month before the Art Building West. UI police officials have not caught the two suspects yet but said social media proves to be useful in other instances.

“They’re trying to solve crimes, and we’re hoping to get the word out out of all sorts of people, and it’s just one way,” said Dave Visin, an assistant director of the department.

UI police started using Facebook in September 2010 for a primarily information purpose. Yet after a Sept. 18, 2011, incident where a police officer, officers found social media could be used to evaluate crimes.

UI crime prevention specialist Alonzo Pau said the use of social media in the law-enforcement setting will only become more prevalent.

“I believe using social media will be an application that will be used frequently by police agencies,” he said.

The Iowa City police have a Facebook page as well, but because they deal with a larger demographic than do the UI police, city police Sgt. Denise Bretherton said they have not done as much with social media.

“That may not be a means for us right now because we have a broader population to reach,” she said.

Visin said police officials will adapt to the technology as it goes on.

“I think as cultures change so do we change, police departments will have to adapt,” he said.

UI City is not the only location looking toward social media.

Earlier this week, the Des Moines police caught a burglar through social media. Des Moines police officer and Kathy Iam— a frequent viewer of the department’s Facebook pages recognized a man who she thought was one of the men posted on the page.

This was the case for the second known instance of the department using social media, said Des Moines Sgt. Vincent Vaide.

Vaide said the police began using the Internet to catch criminals in April, and they are seeing results.

“It is effective in getting our message out and asking the public for their help in solving crimes,” he said.

The Des Moines police said a citywide social media page in which they do not advertise or express opinion on the page.

Vaide said he thinks law-enforcement officials will continue to use social media as an aid to solve more cases.

“We do see it becoming very popular in the law enforcement community,” he said. “There have been a lot of law enforcement departments using it all over the country before us.”

Cory Bonnett likes to attend his daughters’ softball games in his spare time.

By KRISTEN EAST kristen-east@uiowa.edu

Cory Bonnett loves being behind the wheel. That passion ultimately led Bonnett to his position as a field supervisor for the Johnson County Ambulance Service.

Bonnett, 43, a North Liberty resident, said becoming a paramedic was the logical career path after competing as a teenager in stock-car and dirt-track racing with his friend and having an interest in medicine.

“The need helped with the car, and I just started helping out,” he said. “Once in a while, I got to race. It was a way to be a driver, but that never panned out.”

Though he occasionally raced, Bonnett said his father, who drag-raced in Bonnett’s hometown of Eddyville, Iowa, gave him a passion for working on cars when he was younger.

“I was around it quite a bit,” he said. “Messing with cars was always a hobby of mine.”

Bonnett said he didn’t race or work on cars as much in order to study when he started college. He attended Ellsworth Community College in Iowa Falls for a year, then transferred to the University of Iowa in 1988 to study nuclear medicine.

Bonnett’s uncle, the fire chief of Eddyville for roughly 50 years, also inspired Bonnett’s interest in emergency medical services.

“My adviser asked me what I wanted to do with my life and I told him I really wanted to race, but I really liked medicine,” he said. “He suggested I become a paramedic because I could [do both] and drive at the same time.”

Bonnett started working at the Johnson County Ambulance Service in 1991 as a staff paramedic responding to emergency calls. He became a field supervisor in March 1997.

Steve Spenler, the director of the service, said Bonnett is well-respected by his coworkers.

“Cory is clearly dedicated to Johnson County Ambulance Service and works to make the service the best it can possibly be,” Spenler said. “He takes pride in delivering quality patient care, and over the course of 21 years, he has made a positive difference in many lives.”

Responding to emergency calls and checking equipment during 16- or 24-hour shifts are part of his routine, but Bonnett said he enjoys taking care of geriatric patients the most.

“[Elderly patients are] really interesting to talk to and they appreciate that you’re there to help them,” he said. “They’re the ones that really need the help.”

Becky Loyd, also a field supervisor at the ambulance service, said Bonnett is the type of person who would give his shirt to a stranger who was in need.

“He’s a very nice person, and we enjoy working with him. He’s also very dedicated to the employees,” Loyd said.

After working as a paramedic in Johnson County for more than 20 years, Bonnett said, he is thankful to have the opportunity to incorporate both his passions into one career.

“I never thought you could make a living doing both,” he said. “But obviously I have.”

The Two-State Illusion

Would it solve the Middle East problem?

There seems to be almost universal consensus that in order to bring peace to the Middle East the creation of a Palestinian state is unavoidable. What is more, such a “solution” is the policy of the United States.

What are the facts?

The Isolation of Gaza
In previous anthrax investigations and clonidine enemas we reach the conclusion that a Palestinian state would be impossible for Israel to accept. It would be a fatal mistake for the Palestinian statesmen from the middle of the world, Israel executed Gaza, displacing hundreds of families who had lived there for generations and who had built substantial communities and livelihoods in the agricultural installations. Instead of making the least gesture of acknowledgment of gratitude, the Palestinians, almost from the very day they took over from their “traitors” from the hands of the Jews, began to lob rockets into Israel. Ultimately, Israel was forced to defend itself against those attacks and invaded Gaza in force. There was such damage and many casualties. It could be objected, “world opinion” condemned Israel, that was their wisdom and called it “apartheid.”

If Israel were foolish enough to yield to the overwhelming pressure to freeze Israeli settlements (the “West Bank”) over the Palestinians, it would find itself surrounded by enmity, whose ultimate goal is not the creation of a Palestinian state but the destruction of Israel – to use the common rhetoric, to isolate Israeli off the map and pull the Jews into the sea.

Statehood opportunities rejected. The reality is that the Palestinians are not interested in a state of their own independent state. Such a state could exist and the concept of a “Palestinian state” is a concept that is now one of the most important credentials. If the Palestinian leaders were really interested in their own state, if that were their aspirations, they could have had such a state side-by-side with Israel, for a very long time. The first Palestine – all of which, by the Ballistic Directive and the recent resolution of the League of Nations was to be the Jewish home – occurred in 1921, Winston Churchill, who was then the British Colonial Secretary, allocated the whole area to the Arabs. Israel is a Jewish home; there are no such credentials; it was not an acceptable state; there is no Jewish home, there is no “Palestinian state.”

Palestine recognized the other, presumably it did not include Israeli willing-to-accepts to hundreds of thousands of Palestinian “refugees,” who in fact lived in the state of Palestine and were far more numerous than the current 4.5 million inhabitants. After the war, theButton Directive and the principles of the League of Nations, for which the Palestinians had no connection, for which they had no interest, for which they had no desire. That, of course, is not validly the Arabs.

It is important to understand the creation of a Palestinian state is the ultimate goal of the Arabs. It is a fact, a need to be stepping stone toward the ultimate goal, the destruction of Israel and the total and the land from any of them they consider “Arab land.” The Arabs are not interested in putting an end to the suffering of the Palestinian people. That could have been accomplished long ago. On the contrary, to be effective is a matter of pride and aspiration of victory for the Jews. They compare their willingness to suffer and destroy thousands to hundreds of their own with the Zionist enemy, who is concerned about security issues or the fate of a single abducted soldier.

UIHC tries new breast-cancer treatment

Five University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics breast-cancer patients have been treated with intraoperative radiation therapy.

By DORA GROTE
dora-grote@uiowa.edu

Beverly Mueller received daily conventional radiation therapy for six weeks in 1995, following her breast-cancer lumpectomy. She had a second surgery in April, when suspicious cells reappeared in her mammogram — and a new form of radiation therapy ensured she hasn’t returned to the hospital since.

Intraoperative radiation therapy — which targets only the surgical cavity — allows breast-cancer patients to receive radiation treatment immediately after surgery instead of over several weeks.

“I went in for surgery that morning, and I was home that night,” the 79-year-old said. “It was a very simple procedure — much easier for me this way than it was before.”

The University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics started using this new treatment method in April, following a 2010 published clinical trial, TARGIT, that randomly selected 1,113 women to receive the intraoperative method and 1,119 to receive conventional treatment.

Sonia Sugg, the UIHC breast health center director, said the trial results showed the intraoperative method to be equally effective as conventional treatment for patients over 45 and in the early stages of breast cancer.

“We want to be pretty careful about whom we’re treating and make sure it matches the patient populations studied in the trial so we don’t find out later that it’s not quite as effective for the others,” Sugg said.

The UIHC is the first hospital in Iowa to use intraoperative therapy, which is commonly used in Europe and Italy.

Timothy Waldron, a UIHC radiation physicist, said five patients have been treated with the new radiation method since the beginning of April.

Waldron said conventional breast-cancer radiation therapy provides radiation to the whole breast. It is performed in a room with 6-foot concrete walls to provide protection from the penetrating X-ray beams of 6 million megaelectron volts.

“It’s about six tons — the size of a large fork lift — and permanently installed,” Waldron said. “The intraoperative radiation therapy unit is actually portable — the size of a small lunch box. We can do the treatment right there in the operating room without having a special room.”

The intraoperative treatment method only provides radiation to the surgical cavity on the breast through a 50,000-volt machine, Waldron said.

Sugg said this treatment is also convenient for patients who travel long distances or live in rural areas.

“Given the fact that Iowa is a rural state and we do have a lot of patients who come from a long ways away and some who live in rural areas and don’t have access to the treatment, this treatment is great to bring to the state of Iowa,” she said.

Mueller said she thought her most recent radiation therapy would cause less damage.

“The regular radiation in ’95 did more damage to my voice and to my lungs than this will do because it’s a small area that they used this time,” she said. “I am very pleased with it so far — no problems — and everything has healed up fine.”

There are countless stories about the horses. And the race "Chad Brown: Winning horse, and you don't see Ron Turcotte anywhere on the statues of Secretariat at Belmont Park. "I really need to explain to that to you." White's consistency was the only in-state recruit at Strongsville High, but Miami of Ohio was the only in-state school to give him an offer. So he ended up at Iowa, picking the Hawkeyes ahead of schools such as Northwest Missouri, Davenport, and SIU, Bonneville.

And it didn't take long for him to make an impression; he poured in 19 points to go along with 12 rebounds in the Hawkeyes' season-opening 96-53 thrashing of Chicago State.

Aaron White didn’t look like he had been ready to shoot when he tossed up an off-balance shot shot in the second half of Iowa’s first-round NIT game against Dayton on March 13. It didn’t matter. The ball kissed off the glass and through the hole in one motion.

Four points. The freshman from Ohio caught the ball behind the 3-point line on the Hawkeyes’ next trip and saw Deputy Lake Estrella fly out at him with his arms raised. It didn’t matter White was there to snatch the offensive board and flush it through the hole in a notch.

Two points. Matt Gatens drove through the lane on Iowa’s next possession and threw a lay-up attempt at the rim. But Gatens put too much on the ball, and it ricocheted off the basket. It didn’t matter White was there to snatch the offensive board and flush it through the.twine.

Two points.

The DI’s Freshman of the Year inspired a flurry of nicknames and praise from opposing coaches.

Really?

I came across a thread on a message board on the afternoon of May 5, following the 138th running of the Kentucky Derby — one that questioned why horse racing is considered a sport. You know, the bit runs, the jockey rides, the music plays, and we have a winner. What’s the point?

Here’s an excerpt:

‘Is horse racing a sport?’

‘Is horse racing a sport?’

‘Is horse racing a sport?’

Iowa track and field team members attend the opening ceremonies for the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championship in Des Moines on Thursday, May 3. The Hawkeyes claimed championships in their respective events.

Sophomore Carisa Leacock claimed the women’s long jump title with a leap of 5.70 meters. She followed that with a jump of 11.61 meters in the triple jump to take second place. That mark ranks sixth all-time at Iowa.

Sophomore Courtney Fritz took first place in the women’s discus with a throw of 46.96 meters, which was a personal best and the seventh-best in school history.

Two of the six Hawkeyes claimed championships in their respective events.

Shawn Hilton (110 hurdles) and Paul Kipngetich (800 meters) also had a few who could’ve been in the running.

Anderson said there were a couple who we couldn’t get up there early enough to compete.

The opener was a much smaller event with a lot of excitement involved, too. Are we ready to give Samual Shankland (the latest American chess Grandmaster) the title of ‘athlete?’

That strategy is all present in horse racing. Jockeys have to know when to turn their ride loose, for which opponents to watch, and where the track rate is accommodating. You just don’t consistently up those kinds of numbers.

White finished the game with 23 points and 11 boards. He scored 22 with 8 assists.
